FOUR INJURED FIGHTING FIRE IN VANCOUVER

Apartment Block Swept by Flames—Loss Is Estimated at $50,000

TENANTS UNABLE TO SAVE POSSESSIONS

VANCOUVER, April 27 (CP).—Fire ravaged the three-story Ilchester apartment block tonight, sending the occupants of fourteen apartments hurrying to the street. All escaped safely, though a number were aided down a fire escape by firemen.

Four firemen suffered minor injuries when the first floor crashed through to the basement, and they were treated at the General Hospital.

The building, a brick-faced structure, is located at Seventh Avenue and Granville Street, and is owned by D. C. McLaren.

TENANTS SAVE LITTLE

The fire broke out at 6:30 p.m. when most of the tenants were at dinner. They were able to save little but what they could catch up as they ran from smoke which came billowing through their apartment homes.

The blaze started in the basement of the drug store of W. H. Whiles, ate its way to the first floor and then went up the garbage shoot to the third. A west wind carried it through the length of the building. The first floor went through to the basement, and a portion of the roof tumbled in. The second floor escaped major damage.

THREATENS TO SPREAD
Six wooden buildings in the rear were threatened at the height of the flames. Firemen fought the fire for several hours before extinguishing the flames, with the building practically a wreck.

The drug store and contents, together with taxidermist and rug establishments in the building, were wiped out.

No estimate of the damage was made immediately, but $50,000 was regarded as a conservative estimate to cover building, business and furnishings loss.

Smoke spread for several blocks in the vicinity. Traffic was tied up on Granville Street, necessitating the rerouting of street cars and motor traffic along the busy thoroughfare.

LOST MEMBERS NOT FORGOTTEN

(Special to The Colonist)

NEW YORK, April 27.—Tribute was paid to the memory of J. R. Matson, late publisher of The Victoria Daily Colonist, by the leading newspapermen of the United States and Canada here yesterday as the annual conference of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association drew near its close. Led by Hilton U. S. Brown, of The Indianapolis News, the publishers and editors of newspapers both large and small, from all parts of the continent, paused in the busy work of convention meetings to praise the journalistic and civic services of Mr. Matson and of the other members of the association, who died during the past year.

The memorial necrology presented by Mr. Brown and adopted by the association stated:

AN IMPRESSIVE LIST

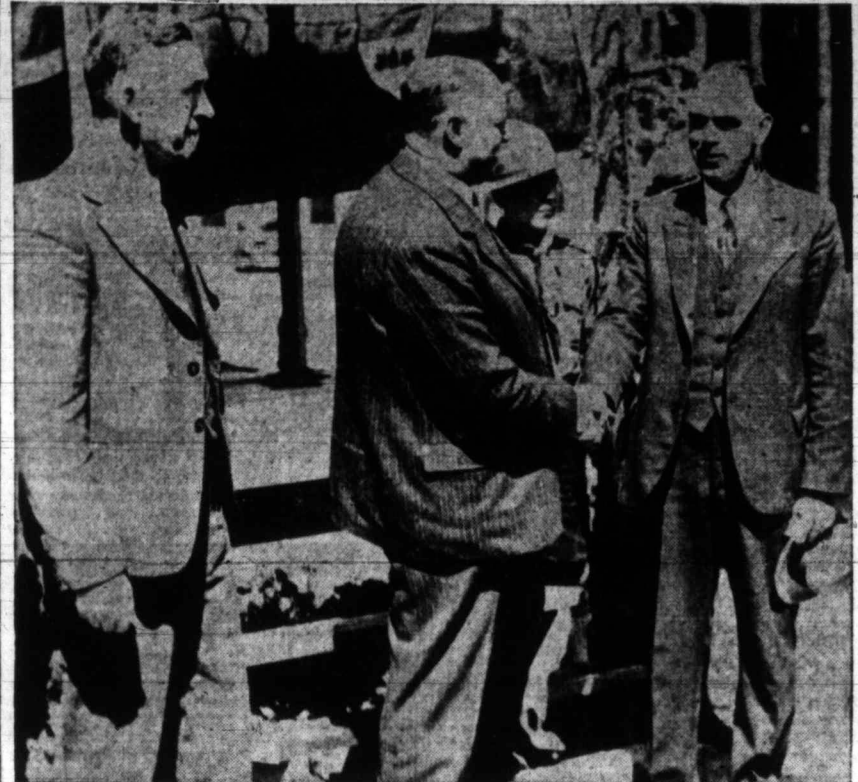

"Every year death closes the career of twenty-five or more members of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association. To the older member an examination of the necrology of the association gives a mental suggestion of the history of journalism in America. To the younger members, the list is no less impressive, and lacks only the remembrance of personal contact."

Sues Firemen for Loss of Children

MONTREAL, April 27 (CP).—Emile Gadbois took action yesterday for $12,000 against the city of Longueuil because the fire department did not reach his home in time to save his five children from death in the flames. In his declaration Gadbois claims the firemen went to the wrong alarm box and so wasted precious time.

Mayors Exchange Good Will Greeting

Mayor John Barsby, of Nanaimo, is here shown extending a welcome to Mayor David Leeming, of Victoria, on the arrival of the "On to Nanaimo" caravan yesterday afternoon, while Reeve R. W. Mayhew, of Oak Bay, looks on. The official delegates to the big Tourist Trade Development meeting at the Coal City, were guests of Nanaimo, which was the headquarters for representatives from many points on the Island. Additional photographs appear on Page 12.

The warden declined to give the name of the victim or other information, stating it must come from the Department of Justice at Ottawa.

DEATH CLAIMS H. C. HELGESEN

Pioneer Resident of Sooke Passes Away After Illness—Funeral Tuesday

Funeral services for Henry Charles Helgesen, seventy-year-old pioneer of Sooke, who died Friday at his home, Sherwood Farm, Metcoshin, will be conducted on Tuesday at 3 p.m. at St. Mary's Church, Metcoshin. The cortege will leave McCall Bros' Funeral Home at 2 p.m.

Mr. Helgesen was born in 1865, the eldest son of the late Hans and Lillian Helgesen, the founders of "Sherwood." Hans Helgesen was one of the famed California "Argonauts of 1849," and came to British Columbia to join in the Cariboo gold rush, and was through the Cassiar, Nevada and British Columbia excitement, and even to the Yukon. His son, Henry, in his early life took an active part in the adventurous life of his father and also shared the hardships incidental to gaining a livelihood in the isolated British Columbia of those days.

MAY ABANDON TALKS

The most immediate subject of speculation here was the effect that submarine construction would have on the forthcoming Anglo-German naval talks. In some quarters it was feared they might be abandoned altogether.

Suspect Fire Set on Span Over Nechako

PRINCE RUPERT, April 27 (CP).—Incendiarism is suspected in connection with a fire which yesterday seriously damaged the long bridge which spans the Nechako River north of Vanderhoof and connects the important Omineca mining district with the outside world. Divisional headquarters of the Provincial Police were today notified of this.

The bridge is a part of the main highway from Vanderhoof to Fort St. James. Details as to the exact extent of the damage have not yet been received.

Doug Peden Stars as Locals Turn Back Assumption College, 38-20

FOURTH ENCOUNTER CARDED TOMORROW

Slipping into the lead in the early minutes with the hard-checking and sharpshooting Doug Peden leading the attack, Victoria Blue Ribbons' basketball machine swung back down the trail towards another Canadian championship last night at the Willows by whipping Assumption College, Eastern representatives, in the third game of the three-out-of-five game series by a 38 to 20 score, as close to 2,000 wildly-cheering fans looked on.

The victory, a hard-earned one at that, puts the tea and coffee laid out in front with a game to spare, and the squads will meet again tomorrow night on the same floor. Another decision for the Victorians will settle the Dominion supremacy for another year, but a triumph the other way will force the teams into a fifth and final tussle, Tuesday evening.

PEDEN HIGH SCORER

Peden, the younger brother of the famous "Torchy" of six-day bike race fame, was the scoring hero of the night, caging nineteen points, most of them from close in under the hoop. Despite the fact that Peden was playing guard, he was running wild under the Assumption basket, but at that, he had to work hard to get the points, for the visitors were more than roughing it up when the Ribbons came in for the rebounds.

REVOLUTION IS REAL AIM

Mayor McGeer Says Agitators Using Vancouver for Communist Campaign

VANCOUVER, April 27 (CP).—A statement that with the organization of the relief camp strike a deliberate attempt has been made to commence a proletarian revolution under the auspices of Communist leadership, is made by Mayor G. G. McGeer in an extensive explanation of the strike and the issues which it involves.

The mayor made a public address to citizens tonight and declared that "a group of agitators have decided to make Vancouver the battleground for Communist propaganda in the Dominion of Canada." An effort was being made to call a general strike on May 1.

STRIKES NO SOLUTION

Problems which led to such occurrences as relief camp strikes could not be solved by "revolution and quarrelling among ourselves," but by discussion, by argument and by constructive goodwill among the Dominion, Provincial and Civic Governments.

"Rebellion exists," said Mayor McGeer. "The open manifestations of revolt against existing conditions can not be denied and ignored. On every hand we hear the angry voices of those who have been exploited and victimized by forces over which the sufferers can exercise no control. The disturbing cries of people, young and old, whose savings have vanished, emphasizes the anguish of fathers and mothers who seek in vain not only for the necessities of life for their families, but for some indication of hope for the future of their children."

VICTIM OF DISPUTE

After reviewing Vancouver's financial difficulties the mayor declared the city now found itself the victim of a weird three-day dispute raging between the National and

Teams Will Canvass Citizens to Raise $40,000 for Five-Year Programme

The drive to raise $40,000 for the Tourist Trade Development Association and Vancouver Island will get under way tomorrow when four divisions, divided into teams, start a canvass of the city under the direction of Frank Paulding, who has organized the campaign.

Heading the four divisions are Alderman T. W. Hawkins, Trustee W. T. Strath, Frank Partridge and E. G. Rowbottom. Each division has been divided into teams with captains, and these teams will call upon businessmen and private citizens alike to secure financial support for the five-year programme of tourist trade development.

SPECIAL APPEALS

Assisting in the drive will be a series of radio programmes conducted by Robert Smith, who will make special appeals over the radio on behalf of the drive.

Tomorrow night the programme will start at 8 o'clock, with Mayor David Leeming making a ten-minute address. A fine musical programme has been arranged. Among the artists will be Charles Hunt, and his orchestra; Mrs. H. C. Corbett, Mrs. C. Hunt, J. Matheson, and John Bell.

The drive for funds will last all week, and those in charge are confident that the objective will be reached before the closing date.

THOUSANDS PRAY FOR WORLD PEACE

Great Tridium at Lourdes Near Close—More Than 200,000 Join Pilgrimage

LOURDES, France, April 27 (AP).—A German Benedictine, Dr. Hermann Bouvier, led thousands of pilgrims in prayers for peace today as the Catholic Church's great tridium neared its end.

The seventy-two hours of uninterrupted supplications, marking the conclusion of the church's two-year "Jubilee of the Redemption," will end at 4 p.m. tomorrow.

Eugene Cardinal Pacelli, Papal secretary of state and legate, will celebrate the final high mass, and shortly afterward the Pontiff's own voice will be heard as he sends his benediction by radio from the Vatican.

Already 200,000 of the faithful have made the pilgrimage to Lourdes for the tridium.

THREE FOUND ALIVE IN MINE WORKINGS

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa, April 27 (CP).—One European and two natives were found alive in the new Machavie gold mine, near Potchefstroom today as rescuers renewed hope for some of the forty-five trapped last Wednesday.

Fervently pressing through the mine workings, where a sudden inrush of water to the lower levels had caught the miners, rescue parties discovered several more bodies.

Representatives of All Sections Determine to Work Unitedly for Furtherance of Tourist Trade, Improvement of Highways, Construction of New Roads and Better Ferry Rates

NANAIMO, April 27.—Vancouver Island has a definite programme for future development. For the first time in nearly seventy years the different communities are determined to work unitedly for the attainment of common objectives and general prosperity. The basis of a long-range plan, backed by unity of thought and purpose, was laid today at a conference of mayors, reeves and designated district representatives.

Formation of an Island council of the Tourist Trade Development Association to further the work of co-ordination of Island endeavor was determined upon. As an evidence of Victoria's desire to enter wholeheartedly into an all-inclusive effort, and as a gesture of good will, Mayor Leeming suggested that the council headquarters should be at Nanaimo.

The main features of the plan are:
Co-operation by all parts of the Island to secure:
Improvement of main highways connecting communities;
Construction of new highways to specific objectives;
Cheaper ferry transportation rates;
Establishment of a central data casting bureau to prevent overlapping of major entertainment events as much as possible.

In addition, each community will make a survey of its resources and requirements, which will be studied with a view to fitting them in to an enlarged plan, backed by the whole Island, which will be drawn up following the completion of such surveys.

BIG MASS MEETING

In the evening, following a day which saw the gathering together of citizens from every part of Vancouver Island to attest their interest and desire for general co-operation, there was a great mass meeting in the Pygmy Pavilion. Here 1,200 persons crowded into the hall to cheer and applaud the birth of a new spirit of Island unity.

A resolution was unanimously passed calling upon the Government to initiate an extensive programme of hard surfacing of highways, providing work to unemployed.

Organized by the Tourist Trade Development Association of Victoria and Vancouver Island, the event was a unique demonstration of the desire of the people of the Island to co-operate and co-ordinate their efforts to bring about a return of prosperity. Not only did each section of the Island endorse the proposed campaign to increase tourist trade, but applauded the idea of creating a definite, articulate Island consciousness as a means to the attainment of constructive development along other lines.

VITAL TO SUCCESS

Mayor John Barsby, of Nanaimo, struck the keynote of the new Island sentiment when, in his introductory remarks as chairman of the mass meeting, he said:

"We address ourselves here to the creation of a solid foundation of mutual understanding on which we may build a permanent Island unity. It is my firm conviction that without this we must fail; with it we will succeed."

Speaker after speaker who followed, each representing a different community or district, emphasized the necessity and importance of unification of Island thought and action. High tribute was paid by the different sections, through their spokesmen, to Mayor David Leeming, of Victoria, whose vision had conceived the idea of consolidation of Island energy in making a drive for new tourist wealth, and to T. H. Eslick, general secretary of the movement, whose dynamic power of organization had brought the communities together.

"We are met here to dedicate ourselves to the cause of a new prosperity through tourist trade development. We are thus assembled because we believe that the future welfare of this Island depends largely upon a greatly increased annual tourist revenue, and because we are determined to co-operate unselfishly in an all-Island effort towards that increase."

Prosperity Tour Carries Message To Whole Island

Complete Unity Prevails in Up-Island Centres as Good Will Caravan Invades Nanaimo to Stimulate Interest in Tourist Trade Development—Big Welcome Is Given Visiting Delegates

BREAKING down barriers that have stood in the way of a united and co-operative development of the whole of Vancouver Island; removing prejudices that had become deep-rooted because of misunderstandings between the southern and northern parts, and overcoming the final obstacles to pave the way for a real and studied plan of development, officials of the Tourist Trade Development Association of Victoria and Vancouver Island, yesterday, firmly cemented the bonds of friendship with a good will caravan that marked the beginning of a new era of progress towards prosperity.

The caravan was planned and organized for the express purpose of bringing together all centres of the Island in a common purpose—that of uniting the Island in a five-year plan of development of the tourist trade and to encourage and stimulate the interest of the Up-Island communities in the scheme that will eventually embrace all sections from Victoria to the far Northern points.

Banks in Mexico Closed Because Of Silver Gains

Price of White Metal Makes Melting of Currency Into Bullion Profitable, Causing Government to Withdraw Pesos From Circulation—U.S. Plans No Price Change Over Week-End

MEXICO, D.F., April 27 (AP).—A bank holiday—President Roosevelt's recourse against financial panic soon after his inauguration—was Mexico's answer today to the Roosevelt silver policies. Rising prices of the white metal caused by the United States Treasury's advanced purchasing price pushed Mexico's peso up to the point where it would be profitable to melt it down and sell it for bullion.

To prevent that the Government of Mexico to be added to the monetary reserve. Financial circles tonight were confident the Bank of Mexico would restore the old exchange rate of 3.60 pesos to the United States dollar, Monday, and in anticipation of that the dollar gained as much as twenty points against the peso, being bought in most exchange houses at 3.50, with the selling rate 3.60.

TO REOPEN MONDAY Today President Lazaro Cardenas' administration ordered all banks closed in order to permit adjustments to the new monetary regulations. It was announced they would be open again Monday as usual.

Treasury inspectors today proceeded to withdraw all silver coins from local banks, and at 6 p.m. 40,000,000 pesos had been taken, the Government paying the equivalent in bank notes.

Orders were issued to Treasury agents throughout the republic to gather all silver coins from the banks and send them to the Bank of Mexico.

Hundreds Gather at Nanaimo to Applaud New Spirit of Unity

NEW OUTLOOK

Continuing Mayor Barsby stressed the necessity, as a preliminary to progress, that "we must very definitely and immediately clear our minds of that useless burden of past grievances which we have all cherished too long. We must lay aside our petty jealousies. We must think less of our own selfish interests and more of the common weal."

"We must be prepared to do real team work in the interests of tourist trade development, assuring ourselves, first, that it is the quickest, surest and safest way back to permanent prosperity; and, second, that we can only achieve it through co-operative effort."

"Don't misunderstand me in this," he added. "Every community on this island should be prepared to enter into a keen rivalry with every other community to secure tourist revenue, but, forgetting the spirit that has been so prevalent in the past, we must all be willing to rejoice at the successes of our sister communities and be ready to help them to further successes."

WE MAKE HISTORY

Mayor Leeming, of Victoria, was given a warm-hearted reception by the big audience when he was called upon to speak. "I am confident that today we make history," he declared amid applause. Here we are, for the first time on record, an assembly of not only the executive officers, but representatives of the entire citizenry of Vancouver Island, imbued with a single purpose—common action for the general advancement and greater prosperity of the island as a whole."

After expressing his sense of the honor he felt in being associated with such a cause, and his pride as president of the Tourist Trade Development Association in attending such a gathering, he remarked: "I am also conscious of the responsibility that is ours to see that, upon the foundation we have laid there will be reared an edifice that will be worthy of our aspirations."

Referring to the mention made by the chairman of the existence in the past of misunderstandings, Mayor Leeming went on: "If, in the past, there have been misunderstandings among us; if we have gone our separate ways, unmindful of each other as communities; if we have failed to study with cordial sympathy the problems of our neighbors—if we have done these things in the past—then let the dead past bury its dead. We today look to the future; we come here to plan for general advancement."

COMMERCIAL DECLINE

"I will not dwell on our present economic and industrial situation. You are all familiar with our sad state. But I would ask you why, even before the crash of 1929, we were on the decline? It was because there never had been any organized plan of development; no unity of thought and action; no effort to assert our just claims. It is, therefore, for us to lay out a definite programme and determine to carry it out."

"Never, since 1866, when Vancouver Island was annexed to the Mainland, has there been consistent justice done to Vancouver Island. On that occasion Victoria was robbed of her free port, and the way was set for commercial decline. At that time, with a population of approximately 6,000 on the island, there were more than 500 businesses."

He was confident, he added, that had the free port been retained there would have been a population probably four times as large as today, providing markets for the producers of natural products on the island. It was contended by some that no proper legal authority had withdrawn the free port, but he did not know that in 1894 Premier Davies had pointed out that the island was not obtaining its fair share of expenditures in proportion to revenues. "And I know that such a condition still exists," he added.

ESSENTIAL NEEDS "I know that if we are to obtain our full share of the benefits of this form of big business—the tourist trade—we must have better conditioned highways, and we must have better transportation rates to and royalties, income and one per cent taxes, real property tax, coal and mineral royalties and fees, amusement and racing taxes, or the many other forms of Government impost. It was, however, reasonable to suppose that all forms of revenue would, indeed, total one-third of those originating in the province as a whole.

"Look about you and you will appreciate how little is returned to us," he added. "The reason for this had been because 'we have been lacking in an island spirit of unity; we have not presented a solid front in making legitimate and reasonable demands for better treatment. Let us in future speak with a single voice. If we do, our future is assured of applause."

MAYOR OF DUNCAN

Declaring that Duncan and the Cowichan district was one hundred per cent behind the movement, Mayor H. F. Prevost, of Duncan, added evidence of community of thought for unification when he went on: "Co-operation is the keynote of this great meeting, and unselfish co-operation must be the keynote of the Tourist Association if it is to succeed. Our people must be brought to realize that if any part of this island can be made more prosperous with tourist dollars, every part must also benefit from that prosperity."

The speaker went on to tell of the natural attractions of the island as a whole, and then more particularly of those in his own beautiful district. He told of a unique canoe trip down the historic Cowichan River that was appreciated by visitors; of the world renowned that of the district won for the excellence of its flowers, and of the annual festival of sweet pea blossoms that was each year attracting more and more visitors.

There was another great asset that could be developed by all centres, he declared. "It is that a sincere and friendly welcome from our people will make our visitors forget some of the bumps in the road. At the entrances of our town a banner will be displayed carrying these words, 'Here you are welcome visitors, not just tourists.' Further, to instill this friendly feeling into the minds of our school children, they are being urged to adopt the address to visitors, 'Can I help you'—and to practice it on every occasion."

"I can think of no better investment," he added, "than that the people of this island can make, or one that would show more return, than the development of honest friendliness of our visitors."

"In closing, may I say that I believe absolutely that the future prosperity of Vancouver Island lies in the tourist trade."

MAYOR OF LADYSMITH

Mayor W. W. Walkem, of Ladysmith, paid complimentary to Victoria for having originated the movement based on the spirit of "One for all and all for one." "This spirit is today outstanding," he went on. "We are gathered here in the pioneer Coal City, demonstrating that unselfishness with which these big men—and I use that word advisedly—are controlled. As we tribute to them, let us dedicate ourselves to the continuance of that same unselfish spirit in all that may transpire, and thus assure the materialization of that vision which has been so ably presented by them."

Mayor Walkem spoke of the rare beauty of the surroundings of his city and district. It was a falling that seemed to be not only local, but residents of a pleasing district often failed to appreciate the attractiveness that was about them. We have been much too prone to look to distant fields for our amusement and holidaying," he said. "The very surfeit of beauty with which our island has been endowed having dulled our senses to their presence—this heritage which in other lands would have been capitalized long years ago."

He gave a personal experience. He was attending a public function and heard a speaker describe the rare charm of a place he had been visiting. "It was an entrancing picture," he was thrilled with the description and felt impelled to ask my neighbor at the table to what locality he was referring. It was my own city and district. Ladysmith was revealed to me by a stranger in a manner I had never before experienced, and I returned home delighted and determined to more fully acquaint myself with those attributes which, due to their very familiarity, I had overlooked."

Mayor Walkem briefly called attention to some of the attractions to which he had been awakened. The location of the city on a beautiful harbor, its bathing facilities, its cherry orchards, its fishing and hunting opportunities, its quaint island petroglyphs and other latent tourist possibilities were mentioned.

REEVE OF OAK BAY

Reeve R. W. Mayhew, of Oak Bay, declared that the profits accruing from the tourist business were greater than those of any other business that the island could develop. It was a natural industry, and therefore should be easy to develop. All could share in the profits. There were, on the island, things that other places could not offer in such abundance. There were also things that were required to round out the attractiveness, and chief among these were good roads. These could, however, be secured by "united, persistent and intelligent effort."

Oak Bay, he declared, would do all that it could to make a success of the unified effort to win prosperity.

REEVE WILLIAM CROUCH

"I am exceedingly glad to have the opportunity of being present at such a gathering as this and to have the privilege, as the Reeve of Saanich, to say a few words as to why I am fully supporting the Tourist Trade Development Association of Victoria and Vancouver Island," said Reeve William Crouch in opening his address.

All were agreed, he said, the chief need of the present day was that more money should be placed in circulation. "My friend, Mayor McGee, of Vancouver, says there are more monetary systems than there are fleas on a dog's back. Now I am not an authority on monetary systems, or fleas, but this I do know, that here ready to your hand is one system of placing new money into circulation that is going to be hard to beat."

An increase in the tourist traffic to Vancouver Island, Reeve Crouch said, would eventually mean the purchase of additional produce from the farmers by hotels and restaurants, besides giving employment to additional help in those establishments. "When a tourist comes to Victoria he usually continues up the island, and if he lands in Nanaimo he will come down to Victoria. As long as he spends his money on the island, wherever it may be, all must benefit."

ROADS NEED REPAIR

Reeve Crouch urged the cities, municipalities and districts to fix up their roads as well as they possibly can, and as soon as they can. "I know they cannot do much as the Provincial Government has taken away grants belonging to them and has added social service costs. Sixty thousand dollars was taken out of the Saanich treasury and $30,000 given back of our own money to help us pay our relief bills, and then the Government has the nerve to

"In this big movement that has been successfully launched let us all pull together because what helps you helps me. We fully realize all cannot be done at once. It takes time, but I am confident it can be done, and we can make this industry a great thing for Vancouver Island. I am happy to contribute to this new undertaking, and I am sure we are going to receive the fullest co-operation from the island centres we visited on our way here and those that lie farther north," concluded Mr. Crouch.

THREE ESSENTIALS

Mayor C. J. Spratt, of Alberni, declared that there were three essentials to tourist development. They were unity, roads and faith. The island was endowed with natural riches that would appeal to tourists, but these were not properly developed. He told of the scenic beauties of the Alberni District and of need for making these attractions available to the public.

C. H. Fitzgerald, speaking on behalf of Campbell River and district, instanced the lure of island romance, the picturesque quality of its forests and waterways, and of the opportunities that existed all over the island but which awaited opening by roads.

R. A. Clements, of Cumberland, saw in the tourist trade development something that definitely pointed towards better times. It had to be developed co-operatively and unselfishly.

UNITY ESSENTIAL

General Noel Money drew on his long experience in association with the tourist traffic to point out that the manner in which the new wealth created through all classes of the community. It was time that there was a united movement to increase the volume of tourists, he maintained.

Too long had the rest of the island let Victoria bear the burden of the effort to attract visitors. If all sections combined then great good could be accomplished.

J. E. Armistead, of Sayward, spoke most effectively on the value of unity and organization, illustrating his points with many witticisms.

Percy Rushton, of Parksville, closed with an excellent review of the fish and game resources of the island as an attraction. He instanced some of the advantages of his district.

CANNOT SUE IN STATE COURTS

Washington Judge Rules Against Federal Proceedings Against Reifels

SEATTLE, April 27 (AP).—Superior Judge Malcolm Douglas held today that the Federal Government cannot pursue in state courts its $17,250,000 suit to collect internal revenue taxes and customs duties against the Reifel liquor interests of British Columbia.

He quashed a writ of garnishment against the Henrich Brewing Company here in which the Brewers & Distillers, Ltd., controlled by Henry Reifel and his son, George, of Vancouver, B.C., held stock. The Government had sought the writ in an effort to collect taxes which it claims are due the United States on liquor alleged to have been smuggled into this country by the Reifels during prohibition.

The Reifels forfeited $200,000 bond here in September when they failed to appear for hearing on a liquor smuggling charge.

Suit against the Henrich Company was dismissed last October by Federal Judge Jeremiah Neterer, who ruled the Government had not properly served garnishment papers on the Brewers & Distillers, Ltd. The Government then brought suit in superior court by serving notice of the garnishment by publication.

Union Men Voting on Single Hour's Strike As Sign of Sympathy

Seamen and Longshoremen Will Lay Off for Interval—C.C.F. Women Hold "Cashless" Tag Day to Support Relief Workers

VANCOUVER, April 27 (CP).—The extent of the proposed one-hour "general" strike, in sympathy with relief workers who walked out of British Columbia camps on April 4 in protest against living conditions in the camps, depends upon the vote of the Street Railwaymen's Union early Sunday morning.

The Seamen's and Longshoremen's Unions have already agreed to suspend work for an hour on Monday afternoon. The Street Railwaymen's Union executive has already decided to approve the strike, but they will place the issue before tonight's general meeting.

CASHLESS TAGS
Women of the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation held a "cashless" tag day today, as a demonstration to call attention to the workers' needs. They distributed tags bearing the legend, "I'll help at the Arena." They hoped those who accepted the tags would make cash contributions at a mass meeting in the Arena Rink tomorrow night.

The city had refused to permit a money-raising tag day in aid of the strikers. Signatures were also obtained by the women on a petition urging that the British Columbia Government and the city of on the Government in the morning. The Premier reiterated the province's stand that the men had been advised against leaving camp; that the camps were open to them, and that a special commission was sitting with the express object of hearing any legitimate complaints. Under these circumstances, the province would not undertake to maintain relief strikers at Vancouver, he stated.

Rev. Robert Connell, leader of the Opposition; Mrs. R. P. Stevens, M.P.P., and V. Midgley presented the Government with a C.C.F. petition, urging temporary aid for the strikers at Vancouver, return of banners and posters seized by the police after Mainland demonstrations and abolition of relief camps.

CHARGES PROVOCATION
Mr. Connell alleged that the police in Vancouver had been provocative; that the Riot Act had been read to a peaceful assembly, and that what was needed was more humane treatment for the men concerned in the strike.

MEETINGS CALLED
The C.C.F. delegation went to some pains to make it clear that the C.C.F. Unemployed Councils have no connection whatever with the Unemployed Councils of the Communist party or with the Workers' Unity League, also said to be making protests in Vancouver.

The C.C.F. it was said, would call a protest meeting at the Arena in Vancouver this evening, when Harold Finch, M.P.P., and Dr. Lyle Telford are to speak, and a Victoria protest meeting on Monday evening at the Chamber of Commerce, when Rev. Robert Connell and Roger Bray will speak.

Meanwhile, the relief strike situation remains virtually unchanged, with between 5,000 and 6,000 men remaining in camps under the Department of National Defence, and between 1,500 and 2,000 men on a walkout, mostly congregated at Vancouver.

ENGAGEMENT REMEMBERED

Thirty Veterans of Gallipoli Gather Here for First Reunion Dinner

Thirty veterans of the Gallipoli campaign gathered in the Douglas Hotel dining-room last evening to observe the twentieth anniversary of the engagement and to hold their first reunion dinner. Lieut.-Colonel H. B. Cunningham occupied the chair. Brigadier-General J. G. Austin was guest of honor.

Unites represented at the gathering were the Royal Navy, Royal Field Artillery, 8th Argylls, 4th Lowland Howitzer Brigade, Royal Naval Division, Royal Irish Fusiliers, Canadian Army Medical Corps, Royal Marines, New Zealand Mounted Rifles, Royal Munster Fusiliers, Sherwood Foresters, Australian Imperial Force, Royal Army Veterinary Corps, Worcestershire Yeomanry, 1st Lowland Field Ambulance, 4th Battalion Royal Welsh Regiment, 8th Field Ambulance, and Royal Army Medical Corps.

ACTS OF CHIVALRY
Brigadier-General Austin moved toasts to the King and to fallen comrades, responded to by all present. He referred to a number of acts of chivalry at Gallipoli, hoping that his companions would never forget those who fell for the Empire.

Those contributing to the programme of instrumental, vocal and other items, included Thomas Thompson, Reginald Clarke, William Anderson, H. Goodmurphy, Arthur Jackman, Reginald Stofor, R. Clark, J. Carmichael and Boyd McGill.

ADMIT SUBMARINES ON THE PROGRAMME

Germany was understood here to feel that the naval clauses of the Versailles Treaty are just as dead as the military and air clauses, which she scrapped with the sudden announcements of March 16 which brought the German army and air force into the open.

The British were faced with two alternatives, first to pursue the scheduled technical talks during the second week of May and get a full view of the German naval policy before making plans on how to deal with the situation; and second, to cancel the conversations and take whatever steps might be agreed upon between France and Italy.

EXPECT NEW EFFORT
One diplomatic source expressed the opinion that a new effort might be made by France to get the three powers to agree to a programme of economic sanctions against Germany as one method of trying to halt Germany's increase in the manufacture of armaments.

The same diplomatic circles expressed the opinion that the powers hardly could permit Germany to continue to spring new sensations week after week without doing something about it.

SOME SATISFACTION

ROME, April 27 (AP).—A Government spokesman said tonight Italy probably would consult the other great powers of Europe concerned with Germany's reported intention to rebuild her U-boat fleet. This was taken to indicate Premier Mussolini would continue to insist on the maintenance of a united front on the part of England, France and Italy on the German situation.

Unofficially a certain amount of satisfaction was expressed here in Germany's act because it was considered likely to stir up England and keep her in line with the Latin bloc.

Neither Germany's air nor naval rearmament has affected Italy as much as land rearmament, but Italy frequently has called attention to the growing air and naval strength in Germany, knowing these points vitally affected England.

OFFICIAL ADMISSION

BERLIN, April 27 (AP).—Germany today officially admitted submarines were being "considered" in connection with plans to rebuild the navy.

At the same time, spokesmen either denied or sidestepped questions concerning reports that U-boats—the Reich's dread Great War weapon, which the Versailles peace treaty denied her—were actually under construction.

An official spokesman at the Defence Ministry said:

"The whole matter of rearmament at sea is in a state of flux and nothing definite has been done. Naturally, the question of submarines plays a role in our consideration for the future."

The reports stirred foreign diplomats here and brought hundreds of inquiries at the Reichswehr (army) Ministry and the Foreign Office.

OFFICIALS RETICENT
Officials were as reticent, however, as they were before the recent public announcement of the Fatherland's rebuilt air force and "re-generated" army.

Public excitement equalled that created by the air force announcement, and was surpassed only by the martial enthusiasm stirred by Adolf Hitler's sensational decision to restore military conscription in Germany.

U-boats, the deeds of which during the war left an indelible impression on the German people, might be an excellent starting point for the new navy, experts said, because they were the cheapest sea weapon.

A recent official visit by representatives of the British navy, said of Vickers, Ltd., was believed

STILL ARGUE OVER LIVERS

Union Fishermen Are Willing To Submit Dispute to Arbitration

PRINCE RUPERT, April 27 (CP).—The Deepsea Fishermen's Union, Prince Rupert Branch, has voted 101 to 6 to declare a strike in the dispute with halibut boat owners over the sharing of proceeds of halibut livers.

The union declared halibut boats being manned and operated by the boat owners were unfair. Actually, no men are involved by the strike vote other than those who were already refusing to work on the boats.

The owners demand that the boats receive one-fifth of the proceeds of halibut livers on a gross stock basis. Previously the boats had not shared in the proceeds of halibut livers which had been divided among the fishermen.

The fishermen desire a continuation of this policy, although they have indicated their willingness to have the question settled by arbitration.

Thousands Relieved of Painful Feet by Us

Through scientific investigation and research in our foot laboratory we have discovered and perfected a new corrective arch support scientifically made and fitted to relieve every kind of arch trouble. This NEW METHOD gives permanent relief. Our feather-weight arch supports, archettes, and other foot appliances, contain NO METAL and overcome fallen arches, swollen ankles, metatarsal trouble, run over heels, weak feet, flat feet, painful heels, pains in the knee, back, leg and thigh, prevent corns, and in many cases reduce BUNIONS remarkably. The following are extracts from a few of the many testimonials that we have received from grateful people:

May I express my appreciation of the success you have made in correcting my wife's foot trouble. She has suffered for years and tried many specialists without any relief. You at once solved the trouble in a scientific manner, and she found immediate relief. Mrs. Richardson asks me to express her deep appreciation.

FRIEND W. RICHARDSON, (Ex-Governor of Calif.)

You have done wonders for me. I cannot thank you sufficiently.

DR. A. N. WARD, A.M., D.D., LL.D., President Western Maryland College.

It is a pleasure for me to thank you for the effective service you have given me. When I came to you my arches were complete broken down, walking was a torture. The whole system was badly affected by the condition of my feet. After the first visit I felt better, and have continued to improve. I realize that my case was of long standing, and thus I am so much more confident of your method and arch supports. I consider it a duty to let sufferers know what you can do for them.

REV. FATHER T. J. McDONALD, St. Vincent Church, Los Angeles.

I am very happy to speak a word of commendation for your method of foot correction. For years my wife has suffered from foot trouble, she has worn practically every kind of arch support now on the market, and has had arches built by specialists in New York and Boston, but without great relief. You, Mr. Smith, gave her help at once, for which I am grateful.

REV. J. E. JADERQUIST, Mr. Secy. Bible House of L. A.

Please accept my sincere appreciation for the wonderful relief I have experienced from the correction of my arches through your feather-weight arch supports. I tried many specialists in this line, but from none have I had relief comparable in any way to that given me by Mr. Smith.

REV. FATHER JAMES B. MORRIS, Holy Family Church, South Pasadena.

I wish, with the greatest sincerity, to thank you for all you have done for me. Your supports have given me the relief I needed. It will be a great pleasure for me to tell others of the grand work you are doing for those suffering from foot trouble.

SISTER SUPERIOR, SISTERS OF LORETO CONVERT.
The arch supports made by Mr. Smith gave instant relief and correction. In the few months that these arches were worn, the feet have improved remarkably. The correction work has been very successful, and will aid all those who have troubles of this kind. Not only is instant relief given, but also permanent correction is obtained.

SISTER SUPERIOR IMMACULATE HEART CONVERT.
Your arch supports are quite comfortable and satisfactory, and will I trust carry "Shank's pony" over a long and pleasant mile. Follows my favorite maxim, "Faire la bride que carries you over." I shall have much pleasure in recommending anyone I know with foot trouble.

I wish to thank you most cordially for the successful corrections of numerous fallen arches referred to you by me.

GERMANY'S ATTITUDE

Germany for a long time past has been committing breaches of the Treaty of Versailles and new evidences are constantly springing up of violations of Part V of that pact. Three of the Great Powers, Great Britain, France and Italy, have formally protested, but the protest has come on the top of accomplished facts. The British and French Governments have declared against the unilateral suspension of treaty obligations. The Great Powers, however, now seem to be in the mood to accept German equality of status as part of a general European settlement, but in return Germany is expected to enter into two regional security pacts and a reciprocal air convention. This would appear to regularize German breaches of the Treaty of Versailles on the ground of German participation in mutual guarantees. The extent to which Germany is prepared to assist in those guarantees remains uncertain. The situation has not been clarified by the condemnatory note addressed to Germany by the League of Nations.

It is likely that more optimistic hopes than now prevail regarding European peace will be the outcome of the next few minutes. Germany in her present political and economic condition cannot afford to face the bogey of encirclement. The Powers to right and to left of her, and to the south as well, are prepared to enter into a security pact. If Germany will not participate that will leave her isolated. Herr Hitler has made academic protestations of his desire for peace. Conditions in Germany demand peace. There is widespread recognition that what that country is aiming at more than anything else is to get rid of her inferiority complex. Once she is given equality of status with any other Power that feeling will pass away, and she can resume her place in the comity of nations. In the meantime it is doubtful if the result can be achieved without revision of the Treaty of Versailles. Germany has been proffered the hand of friendship. Possibly she does not believe in the genuineness of the gesture while the text of the treaty remains on the records as a continual reminder of the shame of her defeat in the Great War.

THE BETTER SELF

Boredom, the inverted ego, too much introspection and a tendency to rely on others instead of themselves are some of the evils that beset a portion of humanity in these latter years. Where one or other of these evils has tainted lives there is a tendency to speak of human nature with contempt, as a poor thing which cannot be changed, as an influence which is a millstone round the neck of happiness. The more there is of thought in this vein the greater is the determination of such thinkers to confine themselves to the things of the earth, earthy, and to stifle their dreams. To attempt to give up dreaming is to enter into conflict with the alter ego that each individual possesses. There is thus raised a seething in the heart which explains much of the mental unrest that prevails.

Much as some men may desire it they cannot exorcise their better selves. There is this thought conveyed in an article in The London Sunday Pictorial by Rev. W. H. Elliott, who believes that there is something in man that insists upon dreaming and in such dreaming all practical arguments are brushed aside. No easy excuses are allowed, for our dreams reproach us for being what we are. "We could be better, it seems, if we tried," says Mr. Elliott. "At heart we are thoroughly discontented with our mean little ways, our puny and selfish aims, with the dreary succession of empty years that leaves us so bitter at the last, with the futility that haunts us from youth to age and makes us stand and stare hopelessly at life again and again with the great question—Why?" It is this obstinate dreaming that is the "better self," that is continually at odds with the "worst self," no matter how much the latter may be busy with some profitable plan of its own.

The better self is often awakened by the glimpse of goodness in another life. One of the best things there is in human contacts and relationships is the exercise of that better self. It can be made the medium to leave in its wake new impulses of courage and hope. It is the inspiration of how much good there is in human nature and of how that good may be expended not only for self but for the happiness of others. The better self, working through conscience, warms and revivifies hope in the present and engenders confidence regarding the future. In every man of every sort there is a better self that only wants encouragement. There must be sacrifice whereby it is brought to the surface, but its deeds, constantly wrought, can influence human thought and human action as nothing else can.

The better self always expects good, not ill, from the future. Its exercise gives a reasoned theory of life's purpose; it discerns the great principles by which life is governed; it never believes that we are the playthings of a malevolent power that mocks us by its irony. The law of compensation works nowhere with a more Divine justice than in the moral sphere: it is the better self that always relies on the moral law. That self is necessarily a religious self, for it is the emblem that there is something in man's life that is above Nature, that is operative in spiritual force, that brings new qualities to life, that gives it a higher vigor, that offers a better life in the end. It is not necessarily better conditions or more favorable environments that are wanted. The heart itself, in the moral sphere, can dictate its own course for its own betterment. Faith in the resources of that heart, in the exhibition of the better self, can take the sting out of life's irony and change it into a convincing revelation of Divine mercy.

Where there is boredom, where the inverted ego dominates the thoughts, there is rebellion and despair in the heart. The true conception of life is of life as a whole, not of any petty disruption in the immediate trend of every-day events in the individual's routine. The ideal is won through the power of discipline in which the better self is the constant mentor, in which, by its exercise, the means are found of a continual and marked accession of spiritual power, and by it a higher quality of life is won. The way that the better self dictates is one where the best things are always found at the end, beyond the boundaries of this world. It is through that power that the life of the spirit is growing in strength, in purposeful energy and in happiness. It means the uncovering of wisdom; it means correcting and enlarging the heart; it means broadening the understanding; through it is absorbed that peace that every individual seeks. It is only by the constant exercise of the better self that a man may grow in spiritual grace and be a greater asset to himself and to his fellow-men. Through its energies his mind rises superior to the vicissitudes of fortune; his heart is at peace with the world because it is attuned to the knowledge of those greater expectations which the better way of thinking and living can always envisage.

TOO YOUNG AT NINETY

At the Institute of Experimental Medicine at Moscow men are too young at ninety, for all older are wanted there for experimental purposes. The Institute is aiming at prolonging the normal span of life to 180 years, a figure possibly arrived at by the recent showing of the film of Catherine the Great, for it is felt how thrilling it would be if those alive today had spent their infancy under that regime. What is the nature of the experiments is being kept secret. It is a ruling passion to prolong life, that is, an individual passion. It is not shared, however, by all, for insurance companies, though they might gain in premiums, would lose in annuities. The London Times says, too, that this passion is not altogether shared by parents and grand-parents and uncles and aunts, "who already find that the time for birthday presents slips round with unconscionable speed." Then The Times says:

"A little arithmetic will soon show the danger of the Moscow experiments. Suppose that a man married at twenty-five and had four children, each of whom had four children, and so on ad absurdum or nauseum or infinitum as the case may be. Then it would be possible for men of 180 to have 16,384 great, great, great, great-grandchildren, and to have 21,844 direct descendants, among them 84 who are over 100 years of age. This would introduce into family affairs an unreasonable complexity, and would cheapen the centenarian's achievement. Man will probably reflect that his present span gives him ample time to taste all that life has to offer of joy and sorrow; it gives him sufficient scope to mould or mar his soul; the remaining years held out to him by Moscow could bring nothing new, and he will probably beg the Red doctors to turn their attention to elephants and turtles, who can endure old age with a wholly different composure."

An apology is due and tendered to Mr. Maris Hale because The Colonist printed a letter over his signature which was not written by him. It is not an easy matter always to verify the identity of writers to the press. Mistakes occur, and when they do in this particular they are most unfortunate. Mr. Hale's signature had been wrongly used and The Colonist is exceedingly sorry that it should have been the medium for this use.

This is the state of man: Today he puts forth the tender leaves of hope, tomorrow blossoms, and bears his blushing honours thick upon him: The third day comes a frost, a killing frost; And—when he thinks, good even man, full surely His greatness is a ripening—rips his root, And then he falls, as I do.

—King Henry the Eighth, Act III. Scene 3.

Wisdom is oftentimes nearer when we stoop
Than when we soar.

Note and Comment

E. R. B. D.

By this time, like one who had set out on his way by night, and travelled through a realm of smooth and idle dreams, our history now arrives on the confines where daylight and truth meet us with a clear dawn, representing to our view, though at far distance, true colors and shapes.

The best beginning to be an expression of the land—Thos. Fuller (History of England).

The Canadian Press may be a highly competent and quite conscientious organization, but sometimes we wonder at its selection of the Canadian papers. The London Daily Herald and The Manchester Guardian may have the largest circulation and the greatest influence within the British Isles, but surely their views are not, strictly speaking, news. There are other newspapers published in Britain, and there must be a few of them both important and influential which must occasionally express opinions on issues affecting the business of the Empire and the relations of Britain with the sister dominions, but for some reason we cannot understand the opinions of The Herald and The Guardian only are considered worthy of quotation in the Canadian Press dispatches.

When the Canadian Press was in its infancy there was a generally entertained belief that The Winnipeg Free Press exercised an undue influence in the selection of news which was considered fit to print, but surely it cannot be that at this stage in the history of the organization dispatches from Britain are selected for the exclusive benefit of our prairie contemporary and for support of its views on free trade and protection.

The Free Press has been called The Manchester Guardian of Canada. The London Herald is the organ of the Socialist Party of Great Britain. Although every nation in the world has abandoned the doctrine of the principle of free trade, The Guardian and The Free Press stick to that obsolete abstract thing as closely as a limpet sticks to a rock. In their case free trade does not represent a principle that can be discussed. It is not debatable. It is a dogma. All who do not accept it are anathema. The principle of free trade within the Empire is opposed to the principle of free trade throughout the world, therefore the Ottawa Agreements should be damned and smashed, and any methods of damming and smashing them should be blessed.

The London Herald, speaking under authority of the Socialist Party, which may some day be the ruling party in Britain now that the Liberal Party has dwindled down into political insignificance, would not only smash and damn free trade within the Empire. It does not believe in the Empire at all, and would smash it and sever all connection, political and business, with the Dominions overseas. It does not demand absolute free trade with all the world, because it knows that would flood the British markets with the products of foreign manufactured articles, deprive British workmen of sheltered employment and ruin them. There appears to be only one article within its industrial and ethical code which is unalterable and unchangeable—closer business and political relations with Russia.

But there is one purpose in the life of The Manchester Guardian, The Winnipeg Free Press and The London Herald. That purpose is to create strife between Great Britain and her sister Dominions, and thus smash Imperial trade even if the cost be the dismemberment of the Empire. The Guardian has been all through its history antagonistic to the colonial system. When the colonies developed into dominions and became free to develop their own political and trade principles, the ancient prejudices of the Manchester School still persisted. When the principles adopted by the Overseas Dominions were carried to the Mother Dominion, took root there and began to flourish and bear fruit meet for permanent acceptance, the remnant of free traders held counsel together and began to rage furiously.

But the voice of the once influential Manchester Guardian is the voice of one crying in a political wilderness. The party it has supported for generations, what is left of it, is discredited and scattered. The Guardian may not love the Socialist Party, and possibly would not print a word to help it in attaining power; but it has a hereditary hatred of the Conservative Party and suffers anguish at the thought that it may remain in power. The Winnipeg Free Press also has inherited Liberal principles, but in the course of its life they have occasionally been altered. It has supported many and various political parties for the purpose of keeping the hated Tories out of power, and has its reward in the state of the Western provinces today. There is only one thing upon which its views appear to be final and unalterable. That is hatred of R. B. Bennett both personally and politically. Its feet are on solid ground now and for the first time in many years. But we trust it is not true that the Canadian Press has become an instrument for the gratification of the prejudices of the political mugs of Great Britain and Canada.

Interesting but Inconvenient

"Hundreds wear our pants," said a recent advertisement in the daily press. Not bad when taken as a pun. But it doesn't equal the classic break said to have been made here by an ambitious furniture dealer in boom days. He announced to the public one morning, "We stand behind the beds we sell."—G.B.

Ring-a-Ling-a-Ding!

You've heard "The Bells of St. Mary's," "The Bells of New York," blue bells, cow bells, sleigh bells, church bells and dumbbells, but there are two classes of bells, the "phone bell" and the door bell, that make us feeble. Of the two the "phone bell" is the most persistent. It rings and rings and rings, and after you've jumped out of a nap, raced down the stairs and tripped over a mat or two, the darn thing stops. In the middle of the night someone usually has the wrong number. But that's the price we pay for automatic service—and the next bird that leans on the push button of our front door and wants to demonstrate is going to hear a lot of bells ringing and they won't be joy bells.—R.A.G.

Why Collect Labels Only?

A time-honored hobby in the United States—collecting beer labels—is gaining many new adherents. Now the Victoria Chamber of Commerce has been requested to assist an enthusiast of Greensboro, Penn., who asks for a complete list of breweries in British Columbia.—N.A.C.M.

What Every Woman Knows

"Stretch your mouth fifty times a day if you want to keep beautiful," says Dr. J. Howard Crum, an eminent plastic surgeon. Are we silent? I don't think so; do we eat and do we smile? What on earth, I ask, is stretching, don't we do it every while? Are we talking, laughing, eating, part and parcel of the play? Just what do you mean exactly by your fifty times a day? If, by stretching, you mean gaping, don't you know that lipsticks don't make the open mouth look ugly, makes it almost look askew? Do those girls who suffer from boredom, who can yawn both day and night, take your recipe in earnest if their yawns are stretching right? What has science got to tell us that we haven't known before; there's no trick that you can teach us out of all your silly lore.—B.B.-W.

Prayer for Victory!

Do prayers win basketball games? Since the arrival of the Assumption College team in the city for the Canadian cage final against Victoria Blue Ribbons, this question has been asked in a round-about way over and over. Not one fan, in a hundred attending the present series, know that Coach Father McGee's hoopers offer up a "Hail Mary" just before the opening whistle and also previous to the start of the second half. Mr. and Mrs. John Phan park your eyes at the Assumption huddle tomorrow night, when the teams will be battling it out in the fourth game, and you will notice that the boys go down on one knee and say that little prayer, hoping, no doubt, that it will help them to victory. Despite the denomination, the regular starting line-up say this prayer. I asked Father McGee about it and he verifies it. "It doesn't matter whether they are Catholics or Protestants, that prayer is said, and all the boys repeat it word for word," declared the genial mentor of the Easterners.—J.D.

A Union Pacific shopman at Salina had been drawn on a Federal grand jury and didn't want to serve. When his name was called he asked Judge Pollock to excuse him. "We are very busy at the shops," he said, "and I ought to be there." "So you are one of those men who think the Union Pacific couldn't get along without you," remarked the judge.

"No, your honor," said the shopman. "I know it could get along without me, but I don't want it to find it out."

"Excused," said the judge.

FIFTY YEARS AGO TODAY

(From The Daily British Colonist of April 28, 1885.)

Commissioner of Police—The last Canadian Gazette contains a notice appointing George Rose Johnston to be a commissioner of police and justice of the peace for the Province of British Columbia.

Appointment Made—G. M. Borost, the oldest justice of the peace in the province, has been appointed supplementary justice of the peace and leave for his post on Friday. The appointment is in all respects an excellent one, and the Government is to be congratulated on the selection.

Survey of Railway Lands—In answer to a communication from the Premier urging the Dominion Government to survey and administer the railway lands in British Columbia, in accordance with agreement entered into with the local Government, the following telegram was received yesterday: "Hon. W. L. Smith, Premier, Victoria—Surveyor-general has started for British Columbia to commence survey. Will arrive at Victoria this week or early next. T. M. Burgess."

The Defence—In response to a requisition, the Mayor has called a public meeting to consider the question of the defence.

RED CROSS APPEAL

Sir,—We have just received a letter from the school teacher at Ten-Mile Lake, Quemal, asking for clothing for the children of a widow living there.

Would you be kind enough to insert the following appeal:

"Clothing for a girl of eleven and a boy of ten is urgently needed. They live in the Cariboo District and their mother is a widow. This request comes from the school teacher."

The Red Cross Society, 317 Belmont House, telephone G 3816, will gladly call for clothing and forward it to the school teacher.

ECONOMICS

Sir,—Your editorial of April 25 on "Something for Nothing" contains one sentence on which I desire to congratulate you, as evidence of a beginning in the study of economics. When you write, "As to that 'quaint' old law of supply and demand, it must be relegated to the limbo of forgotten things," your words, whether ironical or not, give evidence of the glimmerings of economic light.

Henry Clay's textbook "Economics," states the same truth in the following words:

"The time-honored 'law of supply and demand' has been misused so long to justify quiescence in the face of obvious evils, that a natural reaction has led to the view that it can be ignored."

I trust that you will pursue your economic studies still further, and even if you do not catch up with them, will adopt Mr. Clay's suggestion to "form your economic theories by conscious and deliberate study, otherwise they will be based on a limited experience and prejudices, interests and ideals which mislead the judgment just because they are unexamined."

JOHN BOWEN-COLTHURST,
Sooke, B.C., April 26, 1935.

PREVIEW QUEEN BALL

Sir,—We would appreciate the opportunity of thanking, through the medium of your publication, all those who had to do with the success of the Preview Queen Ball held yesterday evening, Thursday, April 25, at the Empress Hotel.

We feel sure that if the ball be taken as a criterion for the May 24th celebration, there can be no doubt in anyone's mind as to the high quality and general success of the festivities.

We would like to express our thanks particularly to the members of the Musician's Union who so generously donated their services to the ball. Mr. J. K. Hodges, manager of the Empress Hotel, who gave the ballroom; Digson-Hibben, Ltd., and The Colonist for printing the tickets, and to your valuable assistance in the matter of advance publicity. The various business houses and citizenry in general are deserving of our warmest thanks for the manner in which they supported this community's effort to raise funds for the Victoria Day Celebration this year. To our patrons also, the Hon. T. D. Pattullo and Mrs. Pattullo, Hon. and Mrs. John Hart, Major-General E. C. Ashton, Mayor and Mrs. Leeming, and Commander and Mrs. G. C. Jones, we wish to extend our sincere appreciation for their support.

CREATION OF MONEY

Sir,—In your issue of 24th instant in a letter entitled "Douglas Social Credit," Mr. Bowen-Colthurst says: "For all practical purposes the exclusive creation of money is, in Canada, in the hands of the banks."

I think the theory that the exclusive creation of money is in the hands of the banks is a fallacy, although I admit it is true to a certain extent. For instance, by issuing their own notes, the banks create money, but as Mr. Bowen-Colthurst would hardly credit the banks with creating that money which is in the form of gold, say $100,000,000 in Canada, he is evidently thinking of deposits, all of which, he says, are created by the banks. In other words all deposits are created by loans.

"Take the case of a gold miner in South Africa who strikes it rich and decides to come to Canada. Let us suppose he brings with him $10,000 in gold and deposits it in a Canadian bank. Deposits go up $10,000, but how can it be said that this deposit was created by the bank?"

Suppose this miner invests his money in a farm with the requisite equipment and having a reputation for honesty and integrity borrows $5,000 from the bank. Does this loan create a deposit? If our borrower instructs the bank to credit the proceeds to his account, it does.

The bank debits "loans" with $5,000, credits "interest" with say $87 and deposits "deposits" with $4,913. Bank deposits have increased by $4,913, but the increase in that bank may not last very long, in fact, the whole deposit may be checked out the first day, but so long as the cheques are deposited in some bank, without repaying loans, I think the loan has created deposits, or money, if you will. If the borrower draws cash instead of asking the bank to credit his account, or if subsequent holders of his cheques draw cash, then deposits are not increased by the whole amount of the loan, or say the borrower gives me a cheque for $4,913 and I pay off my loan at the bank, then "deposits" are not increased, neither are loans in the aggregate, and there is no more money in the world than there was before.

So it depends upon what actually happens whether loans create deposits or not, and what happens is beyond the powers of the banks to control.

THE COLONIST IN LONDON

Is there any further limit in this creation of bank credit? For ease in comprehension, let us say we could start a bank here with a capital of $10,000. As a matter of fact we know that it takes half a million, but these large amounts are hard to grasp. Suppose we have received our charter and have a paid-up capital of $10,000, with the privilege of issuing notes up to another $10,000. The first day our miner-farmer comes in and borrows $10,000, and gives his cheques to customers of other banks. The second day a fisherman calls and borrows $10,000, and takes all our bank notes, and the cheques of borrower No. 1 have come in and taken all our shareholders' money. We have as assets the two promissory notes for $20,000. The third day a merchant calls and wants to borrow $10,000. Can we lend it to him? There is nothing to prevent, except our sanity. Suppose we make the loan and create another deposit of $10,000. The following day the third borrower's cheques of $10,000 come in through the clearing, not to mention some of our own notes. The clearing house will want cash in payment, but we have none, and our bank is closed.

This illustration, though crude, shows that the bank cannot go on lending without reference to its cash reserves, and in order to get and keep those reserves, it has to gather up deposits, that is your money, gentle reader, and the money of all the other 4,700,000 depositors in Canada.

PRE-EMPTIVE JUMPS

Pre-emptive jumps to four, made either originally or as overcalls, can sometimes steal games from even the strongest of opposition.

On the hand below, South stepped in with a four-spade bid after his right-hand opponent had opened the bidding. By so doing, he not only shut the opponents out of a day-down game of their own, but managed to fulfill his own contract through faulty defence. The key to South's play of the hand was in his very intelligent failure to falsecard on the opening lead. This put the West player up against an almost impossible guess.

VICTORIA CLUB GREENS BUSY

Twenty-Sixth Season Opens at Beacon Hill With Large Attendance

By W. H. YOUNG
With the weather man on his best behavior, together with greens that were well-nigh perfect, the very large number who attended the opening of the twenty-sixth season of the Victoria Lawn Bowling Club found a perfect setting in which to enjoy their favorite sport. That they thoroughly enjoyed their experience was amply demonstrated by the many complimentary remarks heard during the afternoon, especially with reference to the improvement in the condition of the greens. At the appointed hour, President J. E. Johnson called the gathering to order and, in a few well-chosen sentences, expressed the appreciation of the officers of the club upon the splendid turn-out. Especially did he welcome the visitors from other clubs in the district, as well as the many new members who have thrown in their lot with the parent club.

As representatives of their respective clubs, A. F. Mitchell, of Lake Hill, and W. Davidson, of Burnside, added their quota of appreciation of the privilege of taking part in the annual event to which all lawn bowlers in the district looked forward.

Before declaring the greens formally opened, those present were asked to observe a brief period of silence as a mark of respect to the memory of those members of the fraternity who had passed on during the year.

R. B. DUNN "HATTED"
President Johnson then indulged in a bit of merriment when he asked "Bob" Dunn to step forward and receive a new "lid", but whether it was given because of the affection in which the recipient is held by the membership, or because the hat of "many colors" had outlived its usefulness, was not stated. However,

"A Host of Golden Daffodils"

Such a scene as the one shown above brings flashing through one's mind those famous lines by William Wordsworth, when he saw "a host of golden daffodils, beside the lake, beneath the trees, fluttering and dancing in the breeze." It must have been the poetic beauty of these lines that inspired the Parks Board of the City Council to have thousands of daffodil bulbs planted beneath the trees, near the margin of Goodacre Lake in Beacon Hill Park. A verdant lawn has grown over the place where the bulbs were planted, so that the flowers now look as if they were growing in a wild state which, incidentally, suits them better than when planted in prim and proper geometrical design.

The Christening took place at St. Michael and All Angels' Church at 3:30 o'clock on Sunday afternoon of James Brian, son of Mr. and Mrs. Leslie J. Inglis, of Great Central Lake. The christening robe, beautifully embroidered, was an heirloom, having been in the family nearly one hundred years, James Brian being the fourth generation to be christened in it.

The godfathers were: Mr. Val. Carnac, of Hongkong, China, with Mr. E. Devitt, acting as proxy, and Mr. Gilbert Clarke, of Chemainus. The godmother is Miss J. Inglis, of Hamstead, London, the proxy being Mrs. Humphries. Following the service a reception was held at the home of the grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. J. Inglis, Lakeside, twenty guests being present. Mrs. Stubbs and Mrs. Devitt, maternal grandparents, poured, to which Mr. Leslie Inglis responded, after which the beautifully decorated two-tier christening cake was cut. Master James Brian was the recipient of many lovely gifts from the friends of his parents, both here and abroad.

SAYS BENNETT RECORD CLEAR

R. A. Wootton Points to Unfilled Pledges of Liberals
While in Power

"The Conservative party is proud of the record of the administration given by the Government of Canada under the leadership of Rt. Hon. R. B. Bennett. With the record maintained for the last few years, the people can be reasonably certain that a good administration will be given in the future," R. A. Wootton, vice-president of the Victoria Conservative Association, told a gathering of Ward Three Conservatives on Friday night.

Ward Three organization met in the Conservative rooms, with J. E. Branson in the chair. An excellent turnout of members heard Mr. Wootton speak. An attractive programme of musical entertainment followed. The proceedings closed with a special hour. Speaking on national policies, Mr. Wootton continued:

BEFORE AND AFTER

"While it has been the habit of political leaders to offer much to the public before election, but to give little after election, we have an example of real statesmanship offered us by Mr. Bennett, who says that regardless of success at election, the people of this country shall have those legislative measures leading to reform, which these times require, before he appeals to the country."

"Therefore, in the present session of Parliament, laws will be enacted to improve labor conditions, and to carry out the reform policies he has enunciated."

SOUNDED WARNING

Contrasting administrations under Rt. Hon. R. B. Bennett and Rt. Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, Mr. Wootton said Mr. King had denied the existence of unemployment as a problem in 1930, and Mr. Bennett had faced it with measures designed to alleviate distress. Mr. Bennett was on record in Hansard with a clear warning against the coming stock debacle

In declaring Miss Ferguson winner, Allan Wade, Dominion Festival adjudicator, said that Thora Adams, who played Ada Mason in "Vindicta," the offering of the Theatre Arts Guild of Halifax, was a close runner-up for the prize. The prize for the best performance by a man was awarded to Moray Sinclair, of the Masquers Club, of Winnipeg, who played Smirnov in "The Bear" by Anthony Tchekov.

OF HIGH CALIBRE
The festival closed tonight after a week of dramatic offerings, which were exceedingly high in calibre, generally speaking.

Today Mr. Wade witnessed six performances by companies from cities as far east as Saint John and as far west as Regina. The Regina Little Theatre Club played a little sketch which has already been given

The Winnipeg offering was "The Bear," which the Masquers' Club gave. Mr. Wade was loud in praise of the performance of Moray Sinclair, and considered the whole presentation of a high calibre.

At the conclusion of the evening performance, and the week of drama in Ottawa, the Governor-General spoke briefly. He expressed the conviction that the movement would continue and prosper long after his departure from Canada. He hoped for establishment of a national theatre in Canada in the not too distant future.

REVOLUTION IS REAL AIM

Provincial Governments, and a dissatisfied section of the unemployed. The number of actual relief camp strikers had been exaggerated, the mayor said, stating that only 1,296 men had left the camps in Military District No. 11.

After a strike last December he had urged an inquiry, but this had been delayed until the present strike had been called.

"Be that as it may, we also know for a definite certainty that the present strike would have been attempted, no matter what was done, and that it was organized as a part of a movement intended to culminate in a general strike in the city of Vancouver. Assurances to the men in the camp were given by the Communist leaders that a general strike tying up completely the affairs of our city would take place. The men in the camps were also assured that the general strike in Vancouver would be the commencement of a revolution that would sweep the existing system aside and substitute in its place a proletarian dictatorship that would change our system of Government into one of Communist authority and Soviet power.

IS WELL ORGANIZED

"It is well for you to know that the present trouble is by no means confined to a protest against relief camp conditions. The present disturbance is well organized and coldly planned and goes much farther than mere relief camp grievances."

The mayor reviewed the demands of the Relief Camp Workers' Union, drawn up in Kamloops in March, and said that while some were fair, the last disclosed the Communist nature of the organization. It read: "That Section 98 of the Criminal Code, Sections 41 to 42 of the Immigration Act, vagrancy laws and all anti-working class laws, be abolished."

"In the meantime, Communist organizers were at work in Vancouver, agitating for a general strike here, a strike that would be purely revolutionary in character. Unfortunately for the leaders of this extraordinary adventure, the numbers who were induced to leave the camps was disappointing and the attempt at a general strike in Vancouver failed completely. Reason and common sense luckily prevailed with the vast majority to whom the Communist organizers had appealed to join in a wild and impossible undertaking."

DEFIANT AND BELLIGERENT

The Mayor then reviewed the arrival of the strikers, their demands on the city, declaring the attitude of the delegation "was defiant and belligerent."

"We pointed out that the City Council had no power to meet the needs of the destitute of other communities in British Columbia and of other provinces. We also pointed out that in view of the fact that we were compelled to ask aid from both National and Provincial Governments to relieve our own desperate position, that we could not subsidize strikers who were actually in rebellion against the policies being maintained by the Government of the Dominion and the Province, of which our civic government was only a junior authority."

The strikers, he said, proceeded to carry out their threats, holding tag days and nuisance parades in violation of city by-laws. Stores were invaded and the peace and order of the community violated. Reason, rather than force, was followed by the City Council, until there occurred the attack upon the Hudson's Bay Store on Tuesday last and the gathering in Victory Square afterwards, at which the Mayor read the Riot Act.

VIOLENT VIOLATION

"No more vicious violation of the peace, order and good government of a Canadian city has ever taken place," Mayor McGeer said of the destruction of property in the Hudson's Bay Store.

The Riot Act was not read to gain advantage for the police over the strikers, but for the protection of the general public who might be present. Had it not been for the fact that our city police were adequately supported by both national and provincial police reserves, "a condition of uncontrollable riot and rebellion would have engulfed our city."

is not with the City of Vancouver but with the National Government?

"If we admit that the conduct of the strikers is warranted, then similar conduct on the part of all others suffering from the depression is equally justifiable."

MORE SINISTER CAUSE

"True," continued Mayor McGeer, "the general strike proposed on April 4 did not materialize, but the Communist leaders have not given up. They are busy agitating for a one-hour strike on Monday and a general strike on May 1. They are using the camp strikers to advance a much more sinister cause."

"While it is quite true," said the Mayor at another point, "that the C.C.F. Party of the province outwardly repudiates unconstitutional reforms, it is, nevertheless, the fact that the leaders of the C.C.F. Party in Vancouver have definitely joined with the Communists in their present attempt to repudiate our constitution."

The Mayor detailed the city's proposition to return men to the camps, and in the meantime to finance a delegation of three strikers to go to Ottawa to place the claims of the men before the Federal Government, and also to use its influence for the mitigation of grievances. This proposition had been turned down.

MUST BE PUT TO WORK

It was not enough to say that the methods of the strikers were neither wise nor justifiable. "I fully agree that the camp system must be done away with and that all of our unemployed must be put to work earning a decent living. Before the fundamental changes that must come to pass can be made, either the present or some other government in Ottawa must be compelled to recognize that it is the duty of national governments to lead in co-operating with provincial and municipal governments throughout the Dominion in maintaining ordered progress and peace by providing the opportunity for all who are willing and able to earn a decent living. A majority of public opinion must agree that the creation and issue of currency and credit must be administered to serve the needs of the people and the nation."

This would constitute vast and difficult problems, but a start could be made without delay. "We can put the people to work and deal with the other problems as time goes on."

MUCH TO BE DONE

Work was everywhere crying to be done. More than $200,000,000 worth of work was crying to be done in Vancouver and its hinterland.

The conferences of mayors had moved towards getting co-operation of the Dominion, and the demands of the cities of Canada were now before the Federal Government. The National Government had not yet responded, but public opinion had.

DEFIANT AND BELLIGERENT

The Mayor then reviewed the arrival of the strikers, their demands on the city, declaring the attitude of the delegation "was defiant and belligerent."

"We pointed out that the City Council had no power to meet the needs of the destitute of other communities in British Columbia and of other provinces. We also pointed out that in view of the fact that we were compelled to ask aid from both National and Provincial Governments to relieve our own desperate position, that we could not subsidize strikers who were actually in rebellion against the policies being maintained by the Government of the Dominion and the Province, of which our civic government was only a junior authority."

Miss Innes Married to Mr. Hewlett

St. Paul's Naval and Garrison Church, Esquimalt, was beautifully decorated yesterday for the wedding of Madeline (Maddie), youngest daughter of Mrs. C. B. Innes, of Victoria, and of the late Mr. Innes, and Mr. William David Hewlett, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Hewlett, "The Grange," Cherry Point. The service took place at 2:30 o'clock.

Mrs. Napier Hemy was responsible for the decorations, which consisted of masses of daffodils and bridal wreath. Rev. Alan Gardiner officiated and Mr. T. R. Myers presided at the organ.

The radiant bride was given in marriage by Mr. A. L. Taylor, and wore a most becoming ensemble of navy blue. The dress was fashioned with a navy blue pleated skirt of crepe de chine and a high-necked bodice of white tulle lace, and was worn with a full-length coat of blue transparent wool and a rough straw hat with a medium brim trimmed with a taffeta ribbon bow. She carried a bouquet of fragrant yellow roses.

BRIDAL ATTENDANT

Her only bridesmaid was Miss Florence Oakes, in a smart tailored dress of pearl grey, finished with navy blue cuffs and buttons, and a grey hat. She carried a bouquet of blue irises and palest pink carnations. The best man was Mr. W. A. (Peter) Annandale, and acting as ushers were Mr. R. Love and Mr. G. Hewlett, brother of the groom.

An informal reception for relatives and intimate friends was held after the service at the home of Mrs. B. C. Combe, 1079 Verrinder Avenue, where the guests were received by Mrs. Innes and Mr. and Mrs. Hewlett. The reception rooms were bright with yellow roses and blue irises, and the refreshment table was centred with a large bowl of yellow roses. Mr. A. R. Wolfenden, an uncle of the bride, proposed the toast to her, after which she cut the cake.

On their return from their honeymoon, Mr. and Mrs. Hewlett will make their home in Duncan. Mrs. A. G. Bolton, of Vancouver, was her sister's wedding.

What Today Means

"TAURUS"

If April 28 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 9:30 to 11:30 a.m., from 2:30 to 4:30 p.m., and from 6:30 to 8:30 p.m. The danger periods are from 7:30 to 9:30 a.m., from 11:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m., and from 8:30 to 10:30 p.m.

There is a possibility of your meeting a person who, despite the fact that he lacks every qualification needed to justify his discussing a subject with which you are familiar, will try to force his opinion on you. It will be a mistake to even try to argue with him, or to permit yourself to be upset. Actions on this date are likely to be the medium through which personal dislikes will be formed, so it will be wise to regulate yours to fit in with the time, place and company, wherever you may be. It may be well to remember that words mean nothing if an action contradicts them. There may be a temptation to fall into careless habits today, which will be a great error, as embarrassment is likely to result. Outside activities are likely to produce more enjoyable entertainment than indoor ones will. Married and engaged couples, as well as sweethearts, will be displaying good judgment if they refrain from harping too long on any disagreeable subject.

If a woman and April 28 is your birthday, you are rather susceptible to flattery. Be careful it does not warp your judgment, especially in financial matters. Be careful how much you confide in strangers on this day, especially if personal matters are being discussed. You may receive, through a friend, a pleasant surprise, and it will be advisable to express your appreciation in no uncertain manner. You are likely to advance to either a high social or business position if you do not permit discouragement to retard your programme. In love you should be very fortunate. You are probably best suited for work of an artistic nature, teaching, elocution, or acting as saleswoman.

The child born on April 28, when it arrives at preparatory school age, may take an interest in some special hobby, which, if encouraged, is likely to prove helpful in some highly specialized branch of study it may later on take up.

If a man and April 28 is your natal day, a lot of determination probably will enable you to accomplish whatever you have your heart set on doing. A wife possibly will give you the encouragement you need. Law, printing, educational work, journalism, as well as painting, may provide a means through Rebuilding the blackened ruins of their ancient posts, the Adventurers agree to Lord Selkirk's plan to settle the Red River district.

Working from their base at Fort William, the Company's rivals, the North-West Company, see in the new settlement an effective bar to their expansion in the West. Fight, fire and foray mark the strife for a patch of land.

Under French influence Canada is invaded from the South. Brock at Detroit and Wellington at Waterloo break the threat for the last time.

At Fort Douglas, Governor Semple is slain in an encounter with the North-Westers. The rivalry between the two companies takes on the aspect of a civil war.

The Imperial Government acts to bring order out of chaos. Both Adventurers and North-Westers gradually realize that co-operation is the best policy for both.

In London amalgamation is discussed, bargained over and finally agreed upon.

Out of the seeds of strife is to grow a mighty tree.

"THE CHILD"

By REGINALD H. WIGGINS, M.D., C.M., L.M.C.C.

THE CHILD LEARNS FROM HIS PET

A dog can help to educate a child. Through their companionship a child may learn sympathy, consideration for other people and things, fidelity, loyalty and fair play. If we will only take the time and patience to give these potentialities a chance to develop in the pet.

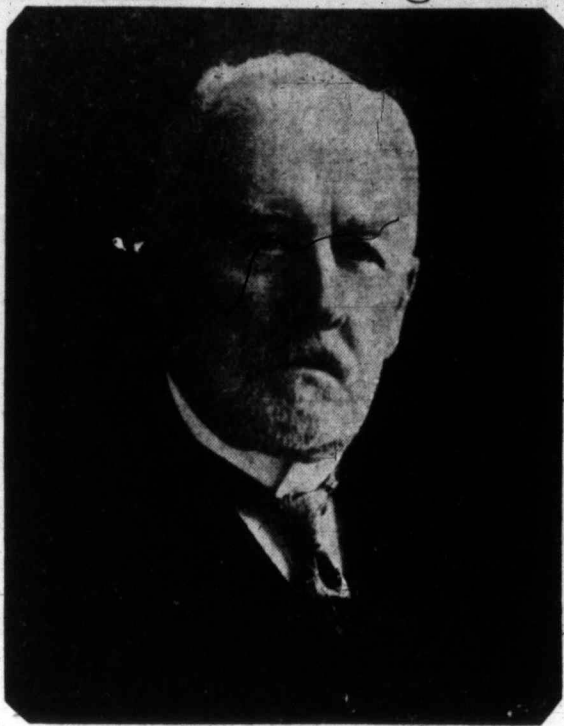

There are many pets from which children will benefit and learn, but the dog may be said to be the king of the pet world. The pup's activity stimulates and helps the child in his play. In this way he gets healthful exercise which develops his muscles to be more capable and his mind more alert. His imagination also comes into play in devising new and more amusing forms of play for his pet. The sympathy and feeling he has for his dog has a mellowing effect on the child.

The disposition of the child and dog should be somewhat similar, then they will be better suited as playmates and companions. For instance, the active, high-spirited terrier—the Irish, Boston Bull, Wire-haired, Fox, Sealyham, Scottish and Cairn—will appeal more to the active, energetic child. Newfoundland, Setters and Cocker Spaniels, for children of the quieter type.

The best age at which to get a dog is from four to six months. These simple, yet varied, wholesome meals a day should be given until ten months of age, when two meals will suffice, and after a year many dogs, particularly the larger ones, do better on one meal a day; an occasional beef bone to gnaw on and plenty of fresh cool drinking water available at all times. Let your child do the actual feeding from the first.

Two lessons which every dog must

Magistrate and Mrs. George Jay, who will celebrate their golden wedding tomorrow. They were married in Victoria on April 29, 1885, at St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, by Rev. J. Stevens. Mr. Jay was born in Norwich, England, and came to Victoria in 1870, and is best known for his long tenure of the office of police magistrate, and as chairman of the School Board. Mrs. Jay, the former Miss Emily Bowden, daughter of the late Mr. William Bowden, well-known pioneer, who came to this province from England with the Royal Engineers in 1858, was born in Victoria.

To sun up: Choose the right dog; care for and train him properly and have the child play his part so that he may himself benefit from his play-companion.

Musical Festival Notes

As the elocution adjudicator at the Victoria Festival commencing May 14 next, Mrs. Ferguson comes to Victoria very highly recommended as an artist and teacher of elocution. As a highly-qualified teacher she was awarded in succession the associateship, licentiate, and fellowship degrees of the Trinity College, London, England, being also awarded the gold medal.

Mrs. Ferguson is also a graduate of the Guildhall School of Music, London, England, and has studied under some of the foremost teachers of expression, taking honors in French poetry and dramatic art under M. Antoine Roche in Paris. Later, Mrs. Ferguson attended Oxford University as a home student, taking philosophy, poetry and literature.

Her dramatic ability was also recognized by professional engagements on the London stage.

As the principal of an important studio in Vancouver, her success in teaching expression and effective interpretation of ideas through perfect diction, is indicated not only in the achievements of her pupils, but also by the outstanding success of her daughter, Miss Brenda Ferguson, who, as Jeanne D'Arc, is the only female character in the trial scene from Bernard Shaw's "Saint Joan," played by the Embassy Players and selected to represent British Columbia in the Dominion drama finals to be held in Ottawa next month.

Mrs. Ferguson's popularity as an adjudicator is also evidenced by her appointment in that capacity for the 1929, 1931 and 1932 Festivals at Kelowna, and also at the 1933 "ish Festival held in Vancouver.

beautify YOUR SKIN..

TO keep your skin young, over 20,000 beauty specialists advise pore-deep cleansing with soap and water. "But," they warn, "do not use just any soap. Use only a soap made from a blend of natural oils—the oils of olive and palm."

Each night and morning, massage its soft lather into the pores of face, throat and shoulders. Rinse with warm water; first, then cold. Because Palmolive is made from a secret, scientific blend of the oils of olive and palm, its lather soothes and beautifies your skin... as it cleanses.

Palmolive is pure and safe. It contains no artificial coloring matter. It can be used without fear for the most delicate complexion. In your bath, too, you will find Palmolive delightful. Let it give your whole body a "Schoolgirl Complexion."

A generous supply of olive oil goes into the making of every cake of Palmolive.

I'd wished a thousand times for a BRIGHTER SMILE

One tube of Colgate's gave it to me!

"It was so annoying to see other girls with lovely smiles get all the dates. I didn't dare smile because my teeth were dull and unattractive. Then I tried Colgate's! Just one tube showed me that my teeth were white under the grey film that ordinary toothpaste can't remove. Now my smiles are bright too."

Colgate's cleans better because of its double cleansing action.

First: Colgate's penetrates into every tiny crevice. Cleans your teeth thoroughly.

Second: It polishes your teeth—with the same safe ingredient most dentists use.

And Colgate's peppermint flavour keeps your breath sweet and fresh.

We're so sure of Colgate's that we say: Use Colgate's every night and morning. If one tube doesn't make your teeth whiter, return the empty tube to your dealer. He'll refund its cost.

Promises Great Interest—B.C. Electric and Hudson's Bay Company Co-operating—Fashion Review to Be Given

WOMEN who state that the kitchen is filled with dull, thankless tasks, labor, worry and drudgery, are bound to change their minds after attending The Daily Colonist Cooking and Home Makers' School, May 7, 9 and 10, at the Shrine auditorium.

The courses are under the direction of Miss Claire Andree, official lecturer from The DeBoth Home Makers' School, and her conception of the kitchen is that of a workshop for creative art, a scientific laboratory filled with exciting possibilities. Cooking, from being a necessity, opens into an alluring field for triumphs.

FOUR SESSIONS

The Daily Colonist cooking and home makers' school is made possible through the co-operation of the Hudson's Bay Company and the B.C. Electric Railway. Four sessions will be held in all, commencing Tuesday, May 7, at 2 p.m. The next will be on Thursday, May 9, at 2 p.m., while on Friday, May 10, two sessions will open, one at 9:30 a.m. and one at 2 p.m.

Prickly Porky Gets Into Trouble

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

Once inside that little sugar house of Farmer Brown's Prickly Porky the Porcupine began to examine everything. Never had he been in such a place before and he was curious about everything he could reach. Now Prickly Porky's way of investigating things is to sample them with his teeth. He didn't think much of the big evaporating pan because his teeth made no impression on the hard iron. He didn't think much of the sap pails, which were of tin. He couldn't understand why people wanted things like these around. But there was a wooden bench that quite met his approval. He discovered that there was a salty flavor along the edges of it where the hands of Farmer Brown's Boy and Farmer Brown had rested. And if there is anything in the world Prickly Porky delights in it is the flavor of salt. He is as crazy for that as Buster Bear is for sweets. So Prickly Porky gnawed off slivers with his great teeth and chewed them with as much relish as some little folks I know eat candy.

Now, on one end of that bench Farmer Brown's Boy had left an old sweater. Quite by accident, Prickly Porky pulled this old sweater off the end of the bench and it fell on his back and covered his head. Right away Prickly Porky thought that some strange creature had attacked him. Of course he promptly did as he always does at such a time, raised every one of the thousand little spears that he carries hidden in his coat.

Now, those little spears are as sharp as needles, and each one of them has a little barb just such a little barb as you will find on a fishhook. Of course those thousand little spears went right through that old sweater in all directions. Prickly Porky at once tried to back. He was trying to back out from that thing over his head. For once he was frightened. Of course he couldn't back out from under the sweater because he carried it along with him.

He Was Trying to Back Out From

"Back, back, back," he went across the floor of the little sugar house and smash bang into a great pile of sap pails. Over fell the sap pails with a crash and a rattle and a bang. Some of them hit Prickly Porky, and he thought right away that this was done by the strange creature on his back. He became more frightened than ever, and tried harder than ever to back out. Over came another pile of sap pails. Prickly Porky was thumped and bumped some more. He was so frightened that he was almost crazy. Sap pails lay all over the floor, and no matter in which direction he backed, he backed into some. They clattered and rattled and added to Prickly Porky's fright. He certainly was in trouble this time. Yes, sir, Prickly Porky certainly was in trouble.

What Is the Five Year Plan?

Vancouver Island's Five Year Plan is the result of five months' careful and sincere study by committees consisting of 250 leading citizens of our Island. It covers every angle of tourist trade expansion and marks a definite course of action for co-ordinated effort over a period of five years.

The First Year's Programme

The first essential requirement is to build a Tourist Trade Development Association embracing every community of Vancouver Island. The purpose of this Association is to arouse public interest in the possibilities of tourist trade development and to encourage an interchange of business between Island communities. Among its most specific objects will be the following: To co-ordinate, through a recognized Date Casting Bureau, all Island entertainments and festival dates to prevent clashing. To organize persistent effort for better roads, cheaper transportation, cleaner beaches and saving of Island scenic beauty spots by means of timber preservation, etc.

In Victoria the work of the first year will be devoted to co-ordination of local effort towards improvements and tourist entertainment facilities, which are badly needed. These include the following:

"Erect adequate direction signs throughout Greater Victoria in co-operation with the Automobile Club.

"Organize a corps of intelligent personal guides for tourists.

"Encourage the demolition of dilapidated structures.

"Organize adequate horse riding trails.

"Encourage private enterprise to provide better entertainment facilities for tourists.

"Provide suitable entertainment and music throughout the Summer of 1935.

"Prepare for future use the following for construction by private capital: Definite plans and estimates for a good Auditorium, equipped for indoor athletic meets, dances, music festivals, etc. Provide plans and estimates for a well-equipped Stadium, capable of accommodating international events. Prepare plans and estimates for a good Ice Rink, and also for an Open Air Pleasure Park devoted to swimming, boating, dancing, picnics, fireworks, etc."

Except for general forward Five Year organizing, the above represents substantially the first season's work but this will be supplemented during the Winter of 1935 by a well-directed effort to secure the private capital necessary for the construction of the above entertainment facilities.

During the second, third, fourth and fifth years the work of the Association will be directed towards a general expansion of Vancouver Island's entertainment facilities for the tourist. Closer union between all of the Island's communities will at all times be kept in mind, and it will be the objective of this Island Association to broaden the scope of our advertising so that a specialized campaign can be carried on through the Victoria and Island Publicity Bureau to cover British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Washington, Montana, Oregon, Idaho, Wyoming, Nevada, Colorado, Utah, California and Honolulu.

A particular effort will be made by an all-Island Radio Committee to secure the erection of a powerful radio station on Vancouver Island. To initiate a strikingly original Vancouver Island Festival as an annual attraction. This festival will be based on our flowers, sunshine and Island traditions and will continue for one week each year.

City Hall, Victoria, B.C.,
April 23, 1935.

To My Friends and Fellow Citizens:—
I am calling on you personally for your individual assistance in support of my proposals for a return to prosperity through the development of the Tourist Trade.
I believe in our Five Year Plan, and that it will be productive of work and wages for our citizens, and that it provides the means for an unlimited production of new wealth in which WE MAY ALL PARTICIPATE.
I have repeatedly asked publicly if anyone can suggest any other method to produce new wealth, and am assured that all agree the Five Year Plan is the correct and only available method to this end.

I have not received one single suggestion from anyone as to any other method, and this being so, I feel confident that you will get behind this movement enthusiastically with your time and money.

In order that the programme the Committee now have before them may be put in operation, it is imperative that the funds to carry on this programme be provided.
To this end an "On to Prosperity" Funds Campaign will be held from April 29 to May 7, and I urge all of you to do your share when my official representative calls on you.
I am relying on your individual assistance to make the Five Year Plan successful, and thank you in anticipation.

Yours very sincerely,
D. LEEMING,
Mayor.

What Will It Do?

It will capitalize Vancouver Island's unique advantages as a pleasure resort and create a permanent, profitable tourist industry—by carrying out a carefully prepared, step-by-step plan.

It will provide new sources of revenue—create new employment—better and cheaper transportation—more and better roads—immediate protection for our vanishing timber and natural beauties generally—cleaner beaches—better recreational equipment and buildings—adequate open-air, warm-water swimming facilities—Island-wide rational entertainment for our citizens and visitors—and more advertising.

It will foster Island unity of effort and secure for the Island the full advantages of such unity.

It will interest the tourist, prolong his visit and induce him to return.

It will within five years bring Fifteen Million Dollars of new money to our Island annually.

What Will It Cost?

Organization work of the past five months has been carried on with the utmost economy compatible with efficiency.

With the exception of a minimum office staff the work has been entirely honorary.

Expenses so far have been met by the early contributions of a few well-wishers.

Now the Association enters upon a campaign to raise $40,000.

The careful use of that fund will be in the hands of Mayor David Leeming, chairman; E. W. McMullen and G. H. Harmon, honorary treasurers; R. H. B. Ker, finance chairman; W. T. Straith, J. W. Hudson and Harold Husband, executive committee; all accounts will be audited by Mr. W. B. Monteith, and an annual statement will be published.

Contributions to this Fund will not be sought as a charitable donation, a gift, or annual tribute—but as a straight-out, wise and forward-looking business investment on your part, calculated to bring direct returns. If this Fund is made available by the progressiveness of our citizens and their faith in those men mentioned above, all the developments forecast herein will be materialized and our Island's share of Canada's tourist revenue insured.

Next week a hundred canvassers will call upon the business men of Victoria on behalf of the "On to Prosperity" Campaign, which lasts from April 29 to May 7. These men are giving their time because they believe that well-directed effort will tremendously increase our tourist business. Won't you meet them? Take time to discuss the matter and subscribe to the limit of your ability.

REUNION TO BE CONDUCTED HERE

Veterans of 88th Battalion Will Hold Dinner at Spencer's
On May 23

The ninth annual dinner and reunion of the 88th Battalion will take place in David Spencer's dining-room, Victoria, on May 23. The committee is working hard to make this reunion even more successful than those of previous years. It is to be hoped that through the reduced rates of the various transportation companies and the many attractions offered for the May 24 celebration, there will be a good opportunity for the comrades of the battalion to renew old acquaintances from the Mainland and Up-Island points, enjoy the spirit of good-fellowship. Everything is being arranged to give the maximum of pleasure and entertainment to those attending, and it is to be hoped that this year the reunion will be acclaimed second to none in Canada. Tickets can be obtained from Jones Bros., Yates and Quadra Streets, and Turner's Barber Shop, Campbell Building.

The Beautiful Derelict

CHAPTER XXV

"I have decided to adopt him," Dan said, in his slow, positive fashion. "I shall perhaps be criticized, but criticism, even disapproval, seldom stands in my way. I shall adopt him, making him my son and heir. I have no belief in heathen myths or superstitions, and I think he has gone on some suddenly remembered errand, and will soon return. I shall wait with patience for a time; then if further effort must be made, it shall be done."

"Oh, my boy—my boy!" wailed Mrs. Mingle, who was looking utterly hopeless and disconsolate. "To find him only to lose him—She buried her face in her hands."

"Has he taken Barry's place with you, Ming?"

It was Pat who asked, and with no trace of censure, but simply a kindly interest. "Not likely, Mr. Pat," and Ming raised her sad eyes for a moment. "But Samfari will be Mr. Dan's son, same's Barry was, and I have room in my heart for the memory of Barry and the love of Sam."

"What did you propose to call him, Mr. Wayne?" and Inspector Cox looked his sympathy. It was uncalled for, however, for Dan sat up and said, firmly, "I did propose—and I do propose—to call him Samfari Wayne. He will doubtless be called Sam by his chums, but to me Samfari is a beautiful name and I shall use it, if no one else does."

Fleming Stone had said very little. When at last Pat said, "What is your opinion, Mr. Stone?" Where do you think our Samfari is?" the detective answered, "I can't tell you that, offhand. But we can find out at once, Ming, where have you hidden Samfari?"

"I—me, sir?—what do you mean?" "Cut the fine talk, Ming," and Pat stared at her. "Have you any knowledge of where Samfari is?"

"Me? How could I have, Mr. Pat?" "You talk to her, Dan," his brother said; "she always makes me laugh. Ming, if you've been up to tricks, you'll get just punishment, mind that, now!"

Dan spoke more sternly. "I can't think, Ming, that you have hidden my boy from me! Have you?" "Not from you, Mr. Dan, but from the Korowar. I prefer you not to interfere. I will be responsible for Samfari's safety."

Dan rose and stood before her. "Sarah Mingle," he said, in strong accents, "where is Samfari?"

"In the nursery, Mr.—Dan," and Ming couldn't entirely repress a smile, though she looked penitent also.

"The nursery! What a perfect place! How did you think of that? Now, down to the common room, all of you. I will go and find him and bring my son to you. Come Ming."

The two went away, and Pat began to shepherd the others downstairs. Fleming Stone, however, followed Dan, as he went swiftly along some rear corridors, and Inspector Cox was close on Stone's footsteps.

Ming led the way, and her cheery voice rang out as they neared the nursery door: "We're coming, Samfari! Are you there?"

They were off in the ell, attached to the south wing of the old inn, and they found Samfari there waiting.

The nursery was a large suite of rooms, fitted up with all necessary and convenient appliances for the welfare and happiness of infants whose parents spent their Summers at the old inn before the Waynes bought it. Barry had lived there many of his childhood seasons, and Ming was his efficient and devoted nurse.

The windows were barred lest heedless toddlers lean out too far and now, with plenty of grown-up furniture about, the nursery was a delightful place for anyone looking for quiet and solitude.

Samfari himself threw open the door to his visitors. Dan stepped at once to his side, and putting his arms around the young man's shoulders, made a short speech.

"Before these witnesses," he said, looking round at the interested group, "before Inspector Cox and Detective Stone and Nurse Mingle, I declare here and now that this is my son, Samfari Wayne, and that he is to be accepted as such by all and sundry, so long as he shall live."

"I accept Samfari Wayne as your on and as my cherished friend," and Inspector Cox held out his hand to Samfari, who accepted it gravely. The gesture was repeated heartily by Stone, and with a deferential timidity by Ming.

"He is my boy, as Barry was my boy," she said, almost reverently, and drawing down his tall head she kissed him on the brow.

"Of course," Dan went on, "this will be ratified and legally declared in the courts. This is merely my informal announcement to you, my friends, who are by me now. All details will be properly cared for, as soon as may be. The furtherance of the matter on which Mr. Stone is still working will proceed with all possible speed, but today, tonight, I have set apart for the introduction of my son to my friends. Shall we join them now?"

The three men went downstairs, and in the common room Dan again made practically the same announcement he had made upstairs. The Holts, and Vera, as well as Pat Wayne himself, and Rod Camplion who had drifted back, voiced a chorus of welcome and congratulations, and Samfari, quite at his ease and looking very handsome, smiled his thanks and joy at the occasion.

Ming, in the servants' sitting-room, was telling the tale, and immediately afterwards conferring with Bangs and Kiah regarding a feast that would be spread later for a few of the best and dearest friends of the Waynes.

Jane Holt was perhaps the most excited one of the party. She seemed, like Dan and Ming, ready to accept the new son as a complete substitute for Barry, in every respect. Almost she embarrassed Samfari by the expressions of regard and the assumptions of proprietorship with which she showered him.

Steve Holt, too, appeared to have overcome his uncertainty as to Samfari's worth and value, and made very friendly with him.

Vera was in her kindest, gentlest mood. She welcomed Sam to the family circle, declaring she belonged to it herself.

In a word, everybody was glad and happy, yet not forgetting that Lang Syne was a house of mourning and a dark dark cloud overhanging its people.

When at last the evening was done, and they separated with friendly good nights, Dan asked Samfari if he wished to change his rooms then, or wait another day.

"I shall not change," Sam replied; "I have no fear now of the Korowar. I dwell under the roof of my father. Nothing will harm me. Barry's places are now my places. Yet—I lock my doors."

He smiled a little when he said a final good night and backed into his small foyer, and at once they heard the door click as its lock fastened itself.

The many clocks in the old inn went round, and round, yet at nine next morning no sound had been heard from Samfari.

Kiah and Ming consulted, and then carried their dilemma to Fleming Stone rather than the Waynes.

With them, Stone went to the door that Samfari had clicked shut the night before. It was still shut and locked, and there was no other entrance to the suite. Save, of course, the windows. These, all fastened firmly in place, gave admission to ventilating air, but left no opening large enough for one to get in or out.

"Go and get Mr. Pat Wayne," Stone said to Kiah. "Don't tell Mr. Dag, yet."

And then, with Pat's permission, Stone ordered a pane cut from one of the bedroom windows. Kiah managed this deftly, and Stone stepped through the opening. He turned back quickly, and opening the French window, beckoned to Pat.

Pat came in from the veranda and the two men stood gazing down at Samfari Wayne as he lay in his bed.

And he lay there, dead, with a cruel looking Malay kris sticking out from his heart.

Pat Wayne called Kiah from the veranda, and as he entered Pat dropped the heavy curtain again over the French window.

"We must see what to do," he said, and his voice shook a little. "I'm bewildered, Stone. Why are all these terrors happening here? And while I feel it keenly enough, think of Dan! How can I face him with news of this new tragedy? What do you advise? Shall Kiah go and fetch him up here, or shall we go downstairs and tell him?"

Stone noted that Pat's thoughts were all for his brother. So he said, gently: "Suppose we get Dan up here, and let him advise. Breaking the news to him, hard as it will be, is only the beginning of what we are up against. You know, of course, we must notify Cox at once, and the police routine must start afresh. Let me look round here just a moment before we make any move."

Pat nodded silently and turned again to the still figure on the bed. Stone, who knew the room well, wanted to make himself sure as to the means of entrance. The door into the hall was the only ingress to the suite as a whole. The bedroom, where they were, had a door into the dressing room, and another into Barry's library.

These were not locked or bolted. Samfari had locked only the main outer door.

Two French windows opened on the veranda. One of these had given entrance to the men now in the room, and the other was firmly fastened, with its ventilator-adjusted for air.

Carefully, Stone noted the locks and bolts, even making a few hurried notes, and then said: "How did Samfari's murderer get into this room?"

But Pat's response to this was simply: "And out again? I've often said, Mr. Stone, that I didn't believe in the fiction plots that hinge on what they call a hermetically sealed room; but I must admit this looks like it. I must admit, too, that I BELLEVEILLE, Ont., April 27 (CP).—The report of a Canadian National telegraph dispatcher on a line break near here has started an argument among naturalists. It told how two lads chased a beaver up a tree and had cut the tree down, snapping the wire in the fall. The dispatcher confirmed his report in spite of contentions beavers can't climb trees, and even if they can, the boys could have climbed after the animal.

Victoria United Eleven Gains Top Berth in Inter-City Football League

Local Squad Holds Royals to a Draw In Final Fixture

Score Is 1-1 in Fast Game Played at Vancouver—George Payne Nets Victoria's Lone Marker—Both Tallies Garnered in Second Half—De Costa Is Brilliant

VANCOUVER, April 27 (CP).—Victoria United and New Westminster Royals tied 1-1 here today in the last game of the Inter-City Soccer League schedule. The tie gave the Victoria team first place in the league, with Royals second and Nanaimo City and Vancouver Rangers tied for third.

United, with the sun and wind to their advantage, dominated play in the first part of the game. De Costa, in Victoria's goal, was called on to make a couple of good saves but most of the play was at the other end of the field. Stewart was the visitor's star forward and Payne played well at left wing.

De Costa had the first close call of the game, when Hammond headed a weak clearance by Boyd against the bar, but the ball rebounded into safety.

Payne had a good chance to score for Victoria but shot wide on a pass from Bell, when he had no one to beat but the Royals' goalie. Payne made a fine shot at the Westminster goal but Stewardson dived full length and pushed the ball round the post. Half-time came with no score.

In less than a minute after the restart Westminster took the lead, when March mistakenly let a centre from Askew pass him and Hammond tapped it into the net. Shortly after a wonderful piece of anticipation enabled De Costa to save a header from Turner.

Payne drove a hard shot toward the Royals' goal and, although a defender deflected the ball, it slipped by Stewardson into the net to give Victoria the equalizer.

In the next minute the Victoria outside left had a good chance to put his team in the lead but tried to shoot too hard and just grazed the bar. Morgan drove in a hard shot but the Royals' goalie saved it on his knees.

The Royals then began to press hard. A high centre from Rimmer struck the angle of the post and bar and dropped to De Costa, who cleared it. Turner then got the ball and drove in a hard one but the Victoria goalie caught it safely.

BELL ALMOST SCORES
Bell almost put the visitors ahead, when he headed a centre from Payne inches by the upright, with Stewardson unplaced. A few minutes later he took another centre from the outside left but shot it wide of the goal.

Just before time Dewart drove a hard shot at De Costa that knocked the goalie over but not before he managed to throw the ball safely round the post.

The line-ups:
Victoria United: De Costa; March, Essler, Williams, Barnes, Boyd, Bell, Stewart, Watt, Morgan and Payne. Sub, Wagland.

Westminster Royals—Stewardson; Anderson, Cowan; Rimmer, Stobart, Gemmell; Kerr, Greer, Hammond, Turner and Askew. Sub, Dewart.

DEFEAT ASSUMPTION COLLEGE, 38-20 IN HARD-FOUGHT GAME

Doug Peden Turns In Great Performance as Local Cagers Win Third Fixture of Dominion Basketball Championships—Fourth Game Tomorrow—Win Will Give Ribbons Title

ers found the Ribbons a different squad than in the second fixture when Assumption ran away with a 44-21 decision. The Collegians continually roughed it up and several of their fouls were heavy charges, and both referees spent a busy night calling them.

The Ribbons clicked in great fashion and held possession of the ball most of the time. When they did lose possession they went back to their positions and checked the visitors like Trojans. Big Bill "Moose" Rogin, centre player, was a marked man all evening, and Art Chapman took care of him from start to finish. "Red" Martin turned out and played a big part in the victory, while Chuck Chapman, Porky Andrews and the rest of the boys were in there fighting like fiends, all of them helping Peden to top the scoring brigade.

MERETSKY SCORES
As usual, Art Chapman got the first tip-off, and the Ribbons tried to break through, but in vain. After Sherman had missed with a long shot, Meretsky broke into the score column with a fine shot from the side, and then Sherman was called up for hacking Art Chapman. Art scored the first and missed his second from the strip. Windsor was trying to work the "bucket" play, but the Ribbons were checking too closely for them to break through.

Art Chapman fouled Rogin in the "bucket," but he missed the free throw. Then Rogin bowed over Peden with a heavy charge under the basket and the local guard potted both shots. A double foul was called on the next play, Chuck Chapman and Meretsky being involved, the former missing the latter converting. The Ribbons were pressing hard at this stage, but were missing their shots. With eight minutes gone, the checking was so close the score was only three points each.

SWITCH ATTACK
Assumption then switched their attack, trying long shots, but these were missing their mark. Peden increased the Ribbons' lead when he raced in fast and pushed in Martin's rebound, and then, seconds later, Martin went through fast to score from the side court. He received a long pass from Chuck Chapman to get the basket. The Collegians called time out then and the score was 7-3, with ten minutes left. As play resumed, Rogin finally scored from the "bucket," slipping in a neat field goal from DesJarlais.

Breaking fast from the next tip-off, Art Chapman accepted Andrews' pass and sunk a beauty from right under the twine, and then Andrews put through the next one with a long shot from through centre. Aitchison fouled Art Chapman during the next offensive move of the Ribbons, but the angry centre missed. McKeechie went in for Martin, who was given a great hand as he left the floor.

Nantals and McKeechie both missed with long shots, and then Art Chapman pushed Rogin, again in the "bucket," and the "Moose" sank both awarded throws, making it 11-7 for the tea and coffee experts. The Ribbons stormed around the Assumption hoop on the next play and Nantals pulled down Art Chapman to the floor, but again Art missed both shots, and then Aitchison slapped Peden over the shoulder and the Victoria rear guard star missed from the strip.

RIBBONS ON ATTACK
With three minutes left for the interval, the Ribbons were playing rings around Assumption and missed six shots in rapid succession, the ball travelling across the iron ring time and time again. Sherman went back into the game for Nantals, and right after a double foul was whistled against Peden and Aitchison, Peden converted and so did the visiting skipper and the score board read, Ribbons 14, Assumption 8. Martin returned to the floor for McKeechie, and as the game continued, Peden slapped in Andrews' rebound off the boards, after the Ribbons had worked through the Assumption defence nicely.

DeBord replaced Meretsky after this, and just before the rest period Aitchison sank a long shot from near mid-court, to make the half-time score stand 16-10 for the local quietude.

As the squads took the floor for the final period, Nantals went back for Aitchison. Art Chapman got the tip-off again and Martin went through seconds after the whistle to score from close range on Andrews' fine opening. It was one of the prettiest baskets of the game. Slipping into the "bucket" for a change, Art Chapman turned around fast as he received the ball and bounced in a nice basket off the boards to make it 20-10.

Assumption potted the next basket as Nantals slipped in from the side fast to cage a set-up, and right after he bowed over Peden on a charge. Peden canned both shots with three minutes gone. Assumption were trying to find an opening in the Ribbons' defence wall, but nothing was doing, with the locals checking every man to a standstill. DesJarlais nearly got through but Martin took him out of the play and the visiting guard was given two shots. He scored the first and missed on the second.

THIRD DOUBLE FOUL
DesJarlais hacked Peden during the next Ribbons' rush and the local sharpshooter scored. Again Art Chapman was called up for fouling Rogin in the "bucket." After consultation it was made a double foul, the third during the game. Rogin missed and Art converted. Fourteen minutes were left and the score was 23-13. Sherman went after Martin and fouled him as he was going in from the side and the foul was converted, and then Meretsky rushed through fast on the next play and bounced in Rogin's rebound.

But Ribbons were playing hard and checking every man on every move he made, and increased their lead when Chuck Chapman raced in to push in Andrews' shot off the boards. Aitchison went back in the game for Sherman, and as the play resumed, Nantals pushed over Art Chapman. He missed. Rogin argued the decision with Referee Thomas and a technical foul was given, which Andrews scored.

Play was getting rougher and Andrews was called up for charging on the dribble, and Nantals converted from the line. Then Chuck Chapman put the fans on their feet by taking his brother's pass and found the basket with a great one-handed flip shot, making the count stand, Ribbons 25-16. The Ribbons widened the gap seconds later when Peden got hold of Martin's shot off the boards and made no mistake. He was hacked by DesJarlais at the same time, but missed. Again the Easterners called time out with the score mounting. Byrne went in for Nantals during the time out.

RUSH IN RESERVES
After several shots were missed by the Ribbons, Rogin bowed over Andrews with a hard charge and "Porky" got one of two shots through. Assumption were rushing in reserves constantly in an attempt to halt the Ribbons, but they found the going too tough. Meretsky took the monotony by potting a long one and then the Ribbons called time out with four minutes left, and fourteen points in the lead.

Martin was wide open on the next play and had little trouble sinking Andrews' long pass, and then Peden worked through and twisted one in after taking Chuck Chapman's pass. Just before time, Peden raced away by himself, and scored with nobody within ten feet of him, and thirty seconds from the gong Meretsky sunk the last field goal of the night.

CRICKET TOUR CONTEMPLATED

Representative Canadian Team May Pay Visit to England Next Year

OTTAWA, April 27 (CP).—Possibility of a Canadian cricket team touring the United Kingdom next year is seen in an unconfirmed report current here that Hon. R. C. Matthews, Minister of National Revenue, contemplates sponsoring such a tour.

Thirteen years ago Norman Seagram, of Toronto, took over a strong side that included Dye W. Saunders, K.C., keen Toronto player, who has since died, and C. R. "Sandy" Somerville, of London, who, before he became internationally known as a golfer, was one of the Dominion's finest cricketers. The visit was considered a great success.

Intimate friends of Mr. Matthews say the tour may not materialize unless it is certain the team will be made up of players representative of the best young cricketers in the country. The co-operation of employers would be necessary to insure leave of absence for the team.

BELIEVE IT OR NOT . . . . . By Ripley

EXPLANATION FOR YESTERDAY'S RIPLEY CARTOON
The Knight of the Black Patch—William Montacute, second Earl of Salisbury (1328-1397), was only 10 years old when he heard his father tell of the secret trip taken by King Edward III of England, to pay homage to the King of France in 1331. The boy decided that he would wear a black patch over his right eye until England's humiliation should be avenged. He wore the patch from 1338 until May 8, 1360, the day of the Treaty of Bretigny, in which France ceded a dozen provinces to England, besides an indemnity of $8,000,000. Salisbury was one of the English plenipotentiaries in Bretigny. After affixing his signature to the Treaty, he removed the patch in token of the expiration of his vow.

The Iron Mountain of Sweden—The mountain of Kirunavaara, in the district of Norbotten, Sweden, is considered to be the greatest occurrence of high-grade iron ore in the world. It is estimated that Kirunavaara, which is 2,455 feet high, and Mount Luovara, 2,400 feet high, contain a billion tons of ore, of 70% iron consistency. More than 3,000,000 tons of 70% iron ore are mined here annually.

Rimmer Registers Pair of Goals in Team's 4-2 Verdict

Classy Outside Left Nets Two Great Tallies to Send West Bromwich Albion Down to Defeat Before 93,000 Fans—Score Is Deadlocked at Interval—Prince of Wales Attends

LONDON, April 27 (CP).—Sheffield Wednesday won the English Soccer Cup for the third time in the history of the club today, defeating West Bromwich Albion, 4-2, before a crowd of 93,000 at Wembley Stadium. The Wednesday team was a typical cup game through the ability of its forwards to seize opportunities in front of goal. Both teams had their share of the play in a great struggle.

Palethorpe scored the winners' opening goal a few minutes after the start of the game, but Boys equalized before half time. After resumption, Hooper put the Wednesday ahead, but again West Bromwich drew level through Sandford.

In the dying stages of the game, Rimmer, classy Sheffield outside left, clinched the issue, netting twice in overpowering attacks by the forwards.

The game was fought in cool weather and a strong breeze made things uncomfortable for the spectators, although owing to its direction it did not interfere with the play.

The pitch was in splendid condition and firm enough to suggest a fast game.

Before the match the busiest men were the telegraphers. Hundreds of cables from all over the world were received for club officials and players. One from Australia read: "We are watching you, Wednesday."

The cable was signed "Two Sheffielders."

ENCLOSURE FILLED

Gradually the great enclosure filled and the crowd was entertained by lively music played by military bands. One big drummer was given a great cheer when he split his drum.

On all sides disappointment was expressed that the King was unable to attend.

Community singing of popular songs kept the crowd in a good humor.

Before Referee Fogg whistled for the start of the game the Prince of Wales shook hands with the players of both teams.

Stagging won the toss for Sheffield but the wind made no difference to either team. West Bromwich started with a sharp burst on the left wing, but Brown safely handled a header. Hooper and Surtees then combined to carry the ball into the Throes' area. It was passed to Palethorpe who beat Pearson with a hard, low drive.

Aroused by this reverse the Albion forwards drove through and their attacks were ably supported by the half-backs. Carter, veteran of many battles, opened the way for several attractive moves. Glidden spoiled one grand opportunity to equalize by ballooning over the bar.

The much-touted Sheffield defence was unimpressive in the early stages of the game. On the other hand West Bromwich after the disastrous start gained confidence, holding their rivals, although Rimmer, Starling and Palethorpe, dribbling cleverly, needed careful watching.

The Wednesday progressed with sweeping passes. Pearson was forced to dive into the corner to save a likely looking shot. Rapidly Surtees took play to the other end, and twice in succession Brown hurled himself at the feet of a crowd of players. Each time he emerged with the ball in his possession, the crowd loudly cheering his fine play.

RIMMER SHINES

Once more the Albies were put on the defensive. The crowd was treated to plenty of thrills the ball traveling speedily up and down the field. Rimmer was a thorn in the side of the Throes' defence, being too speedy for Murphy and Shaw.

The Albion then brought the scores level following a splendid midfield movement initiated by W. Richardson. The centre-half pushed the ball forward to Carter, who drew the defence. Swerving through he passed to Boys unmarked well up on the left wing. Like a bullet the ball went into the net from the outside-left's toe.

The Birmingham team was now on top. The forwards worked the ball beautifully towards Brown and several fine centres by Boys gave the backs some anxious moments. One of these flashed past too quickly for W. G. Richardson, who made a strenuous effort to reach the ball.

Sheffield forwards were around the Albion goal in the next moment. Pearson was penalized for carrying but nothing came of the ensuing free kick. Quick tackling by Wednesday's halves kept their opponents from making headway.

Then the Wednesday was awarded a free kick a few yards outside the penalty area but Sharp shot wide. A little later Starling was illegally charged and again Sheffield failed to capitalise on the kick.

Bambino Cracks Out First Homer

Here's a picture for the sports record book—George Herman Ruth smashing out his first home run in the National League. The Babe's single and Homer off Carl Hubbell, before a huge opening day throng, enabled the Braves to defeat the Giants, 4-2. Mrs. Ruth and daughter, Julia, inset, show their hearty approval of the Babe's circuit smash, which came in the fifth inning.

a fine left-footer well wide of Brown to tie the score.

With twenty minutes left to play both goals had miraculous escapes. The excitement was shared by spectators and players alike. Five minutes from the end the Wednesday made certain of victory when Rimmer rammed home two wonderful goals with minutes between.

The first was a header from a pass by Hooper. The second came when he pushed through a rebound after Pearson had only partially saved a hard drive from Starling.

Line-ups: Sheffield Wednesday—Goal, Brown; backs, Nibloe, Catlin; half-backs, Sharp, Miller, Barrows; forwards, Hooper, Surtees, Palethorpe, Starling, Rimmer.

West Bromwich Albion—Goal, Pearson; backs, Shaw, Trentham; half-backs, Murphy, W. Richardson, Edwards; forwards, Glidden, Carter, W. G. Richardson, Sandford, Boys.

SECOND HALF

The second portion of the game started with the Albions making a raid on Brown. Receiving a fine pass from Boys, Glidden rifled in a cunning shot which Brown just tipped round the upright.

Through the skill and persistence of Surtees and Hooper, Sheffield carried the play to the other end. Two attacks left the crowd breathless. From the first Pearson punched away a high centre and from the second Shaw managed to dispose of a lob by Palethorpe, while the custodian was out of position.

At this stage the exhibition was of a typical cup final type.

Attacks and counter-attacks were broken up by sound covering and tackling. Starling picked up a loose pass and went through brilliantly. He passed to Rimmer but Pearson saved his strong shot.

The Albions' close passing was in strong contrast to the wide sweeping passes of their opponents. The way the half-backs on both sides joined in the movements was a feature of the game.

HOOPER TALLIES

It was Burrow, a Wednesday half-back, who created an opening which allowed Hooper to drive in a goal from a pass by Rimmer. This counter was against the run of the play.

At this juncture Sheffield played an inspired game, but a long kick by Trentham proved its undoing. The long drive found the Throes' forwards unmarked. Carter sent an accurate pass to Sandford, who shot

So far none of these charges have been proven, but it is stated that the police are keeping a sharp lookout, and anyone caught thus violating the regulation will be summarily dealt with.

For several weeks past the members of the Albion Cricket Club have been making preparations for the season of 1910, which promises to be the most interesting in the history of cricket in Victoria.

Practice will commence, next week, and on Monday two nets will be put up and everything in readiness to open the season, and it is requested that members turn out faithfully to practice so that they will be in good form for the numerous matches which have been arranged.

DOCKERS BEAT JAMES ISLAND IN CUP FINAL

Come From Behind to Defeat Islanders 2-1 in Soccer Fixture

Trailing a 1-0 score as the teams reached the breather, Esquimalt staged a second half rally that netted them two markers and checked in with a 2-1 victory over James Island in the Combination Cup final played yesterday afternoon at the Royal Athletic Park before a handful of fans.

Islanders played the better football, particularly in the initial stanza, when they had a wide margin in the territorial play, Esquimalt showed better in the final stanza and after tying the score twenty minutes after the resumption of play went out to net what proved to be the winning marker late in the game.

OPEN SCORING

Thirty-five minutes of the first half passed before there was any scoring, but Saddler, in the Esquimalt net, had many anxious moments before Jack Rodger, James Island centre forward, finally earned the only score of this half. The veteran forward beat the defence inside the Esquimalt penalty area, drew Goalsie Saddler towards him, and then picked the far corner of the net with a low shot.

Esquimalt netted the equalizer fifteen minutes after the breather when A. Stewart headed the ball into the Island goal after R. Noble had crossed beautifully from the left wing. Thompson, Islander's goalie, came out to meet the Esquimalt forward, but he headed the ball past him and into the unprotected net.

James Island put on the pressure after this marker and gave the Esquimalt defence plenty of work, while Saddler, the goalie, made a number of brilliant saves.

WINNING GOAL

Breaking up this attack on their citadel, Esquimalt carried the ball the full length of the field and Bill McLean scored with a rolling shot in the corner of the net. Thompson, James Island goalie, was beaten all of the way with the shot.

Islanders rallied in the dying minutes in a final effort to deadlock the fixture, but in vain, and when the last whistle sounded the score stood 2-1 in favor of Esquimalt.

J. Noble replaced A. Stewart on the Esquimalt line-up in the last fifteen minutes of the fixture for the game's only substitution.

J. C. Downs refereed and the teams were:

Esquimalt—Saddler, Knapp, Jim Watt, Day, T. Noble, Warner, McLean, A. Stewart, Kennedy, R. Holman, J. Noble and R. Noble.

James Island—Thompson, Cowden, Rivers, Pettford, Dixon, Rows, Bond, Banks, Rodger, Prater and Nelson.

GIANTS DISPLACE DODGERS AS LEAGUE LEADERS

New Yorkers Play Eighth Consecutive Game Without Defeat—Brooklyn Loses to Braves, 4-2—Pirates Beat Cards—Cleveland Trounces Tigers—White Sox Win Again

NATIONAL LEAGUE
NEW YORK, April 27 (AP).—The Giants went into first place in the National League today by knocking off the Phillies, 5-4, in a close game, while Brooklyn dropped a 4-2 decision to Boston. It was the Giants' eighth consecutive game without a loss, including two ties.

Home runs as usual figured importantly in the scoring. John Moore hit his sixth for the Phils, tying his teammate, Dolph Camilli, for the major league lead. Dick Bartell clouted his third for the Giants, and Clyde Castleman, twenty-year-old right hander, who started for the Giants, retired after Bloddy Ryan hit for the circuit with one on in the eighth. Castleman had given only three hits in the first seven innings.

Ruth Draws Crowd
BROOKLYN, April 27 (AP).—Babe Ruth accomplished nothing of note, except that he brought out a crowd of 21,600 paying fans when he returned to the National League wars today, but this time, with Dutch Brandt on the mound, ended the Brooklyn Dodgers' five-game winning streak and tumbled them out of the National League lead with a 4-2 victory.

On the "game" count, the Dodgers still top the Giants by a half game, but a quick of the early-season averages gives the victorious New Yorkers first place, .750 to Brooklyn's .727.

Brandt held the Dodgers to six hits, one less than the Braves obtained off the combined deliveries of Ray Benge and two rookie left handers, Frank Lamanske and Bob Logan.

AMERICAN LEAGUE
CLEVELAND, April 27 (AP).—The Cleveland Indians scored their sixth consecutive victory today by trouncing the Detroit Tigers in a lopsided contest, 9-2.

Hal Trosky, the tribe's first baseman, walloped two homers and a double to contribute a total of five runs to the Indians' total.

SCHOOL TEAM WINS OPENING CRICKET GAME

University XI Defeats Victoria 94 to 63—Gee Bowls Well

Beneath a warm April sun, local cricketers ushered in the 1935 season yesterday afternoon at the Mt. Tolmie grounds, where the University School eleven defeated Victoria, 94 to 63. The feature of the match was the sensational bowling of Jimmie Gee, of the winning side, who took eight wickets for the small total of nine runs.

Victoria first to bat, were unable to do much with the splendid bowling of Gee, University School trundler, whose good-length balls were breaking perfectly. C. Jones, with fourteen runs, was the only member of the losing side to reach double figures.

TEAGLE MAKES THIRTY
Teagle, first batsman for University School, contributed a useful thirty before being caught by C. Nation. Field, who carried his bat after hitting safely for twenty runs, was the only other member of the school eleven to make more than two-score runs.

Moore and H. Moffatt shared the bowling honors on the Victoria team, each taking three wickets for nineteen runs.

Reminiscences Given of Indian Rebellion 1885

By E. C. B. BAGSHAW

As one who attended, as a guest, the dinner given by the British Campaigners' Association to the veterans who took part in this campaign, it was interesting to hear Colonel Dennis deliver an able and instructive address on events leading up to the Rebellion of 1885; in fact, a history of this great country, known then as the Northwest Territories, from 1870 to 1885, in which he took an active part and raised the Intelligence Corps, known as the Surveyor Scouts, the most of them being surveyors. This corps was the best equipped and most of the mounted troops and did good work at Batoche, where they joined us, and were commanded by him.

Some mention has been made lately in the press about the different units in this campaign. As a humble member of the Boulton Scouts, I thought it would be interesting to a large number of the old residents who are now living here who knew Major Boulton, or have heard of his Scouts, to get some first-hand information. This campaign no doubt drew a lot of attention to the extensive prairie lands and helped the more rapid settlement of them, and incidentally added greatly to the wealth of the Eastern Canadian cities.

When the Rebellion broke out, Major Boulton, who was living in the Russell district, Manitoba, and a retired Canadian officer who had served in the British Army, immediately went to Winnipeg to meet General Middleton, Chief of the Canadian Militia. General Middleton authorized him to raise two troops of mounted men. He immediately purchased the necessary arms and equipment, including some horses and wagons, and had them forwarded to Birtle, Manitoba, and he proceeded to raise the regiment. When the call for volunteers was made, I happened to be on a farm in the Birtle district, and like a lot more young men, recently out from the Old Country looking for adventure, joined up. The only qualifications were to be able to ride, shoot straight and provide your own horse. Major Boulton was a very energetic man, who understood men and was well liked by all ranks. We were equipped and armed with Winchester, drilled by an old regular army sergeant-major for a few days, and marched to the front within ten days of the order to organize.

We were officially known as Boulton's Mounted Infantry, but better known as Boulton's Scouts, and as future events proved, we earned the name. We numbered eighty-five officers and men. Our first day's march was a very trying one. After a rapid thaw in the early days of April, the thermometer dropped below zero. Frost bites were numerous and our horses were covered with ice, having broken through the top ice. We proceeded by rapid marches to Fort Qu'Appelle, where the army was being assembled and which was the headquarters of Middleton's Column. We overtook General Middleton about 100 miles from here. The French Scouts, recently raised by Captain French, a retired Mounted Police officer, were with Middleton, and a fine lot they were.

COVERED ADVANCE
Boulton's Scouts covered the advance of Middleton's column on Fish Creek, as the General had sent French's Scouts across the Saskatchewan River at Clarke's Crossing, where the ferry was, together with the Toronto Grenadiers, the Winnipeg Field Battery and some other units, to sweep the other bank of the river. At Fish Creek the Indians and half-breeds held a very strong position on the banks of a steep ravine through which the trail ran, the enemy's plan evidently being to allow the column into the ravine in close formation before attacking. I might say here that we had only forty men and officers at the battle of Fish Creek, the others having been sent across the river two days previously.

Our first line of Scouts were extended about 400 yards on each side of the trail, which prevented any flank surprise attack. We rode right into their advance guard, which retired to the trenches situated about 300 yards from the bluffs they were driven from. They concentrated a heavy fire on us from three sides. Major Boulton ordered us to lie down and keep up a rapid fire in order to enable our support to come up and extend. The Winnipeg 90th were the first to get into action, and then two guns of the A Battery from Quebec galloped up and opened fire over our heads, driving the Indians into the ravines and into their rifle pits. As we stood the front of the fighting at close range for about twenty minutes, our casualties were heavy in proportion to our numbers. This fight took place on April 24. The Indians and half-breeds were commanded by Gabriel Dumont, a well-known buffalo hunter and a dead shot.

INDIANS WITHDRAW
The Indians withdrew during the night, leaving their dead and a great many of their horses, which they had tied to trees at the bottom of the ravines, our guns having made sad havoc among them. Middleton's column at this fight was about 350 strong and two guns from A Battery. From information obtained from reliable sources, the enemy had about the same number. We remained in the vicinity of Fish Creek for a few days, part of which time was spent in burying our dead and transporting the wounded to the base hospital at Clarke's Crossing. We then proceeded to advance on Batoche. In this march we were joined by French's Scouts, and together we scoured the country for Indians and rode hundreds of miles. At this time we were joined by Captain Galt Howard with his Gatling gun, which was then a new weapon of American manufacture. Boulton's men supplied the horses and were always in support. At Batoche we were the first to get in touch with the enemy, and together with the Howard and Galt guns had a hot fight on the trail by the church on top of the hill above Batoche.

An incident happened on the first day's fighting at Batoche, which I witnessed, and should like to mention. Some of the A Battery men had been sent down on the left hand side of the road beyond the cemetery, where there were a number of Indians in rifle pits. One of these men named Phillips had been badly wounded, when Captain Peters (afterwards Colonel Peters, and well known here as the D.O.C.) heard of it, he went down under quite a heavy fire to aid this wounded man, and succeeded in rescuing him and carried him out, assisted by one of his men on the field, but unfortunately the man died of his wounds. This is where the Indians jumped out of their rifle pits alongside the road and tried to capture the gun, but Howard was too quick for them and swung into action and drove them back, assisted by some of our fellows. For four days we were skirmishing with the Indians, and took part in the charge led by Colonel Williams, of the Midland Battalion, and drove the enemy out of its defences. This happened on May 12, 1885. One of our captains, named Brown, was the first man killed. A fine fellow he was and my chum and side-kicker. A fine wild Irishman named Hope-Hay was the last man wounded, leading a charge on some rifle pits on the river flats. Captain French was killed leading a charge into Batoche's house the same day.

The next day, after Middleton took Batoche, he sent Boulton's men to find Louis Riel, which we did and brought him in a prisoner, much to Major Boulton's satisfaction. Riel had captured Major Boulton in 1870 and ordered him to be shot, but Boulton managed to escape.

FORCED MARCHES
After leaving Batoche, we proceeded to the relief of Prince Albert. Then we proceeded by forced marches to Batoche, where Poundmaker, with about 600 braves, had Colonel Otter hemmed in. On arriving, we were sent by the General with some other mounted men to reconnoitre Poundmaker's position. He was ordered by Middleton to come in and surrender unconditionally within a certain time or take the consequences. He came in the next day with about 500 braves, as fine a lot of painted savages as you would wish to see.

No wonder Otter got the worst of the fight with them and had to retreat to Batoche. After this we took up the chase after Big Bear, whose band had massacred the priests and Hudson Bay men at Fort Pitt and carried away the women and children. We were joined in this by Steele and his police.

He led us a nice dance through swamps and muskegs; no wagons could get through, so at times our commissariat was pretty slim and we had to live on what we could find. After weeks of hunting we got him a great distance north of Edmonton. He paid the penalty for his misdeeds. As I previously said, we were raised in a great hurry, no provision had been made by the Government for a doctor to accompany us, but Dr. P. M. Rolston, who was living with his family near Birtle, volunteered his services, but Major Boulton could not guarantee him any pay. He took a chance on setting any pay and supplied his own horse. He was a retired fleet surgeon, R.N., and one of the best of that famous service.

SOFT-NOSE BULLETS

It was lucky or providential that Dr. Rolston went with us, and from my personal knowledge he was always where the fighting was the heaviest and saved several of our men's lives. The soft-nose bullets made some bad wounds. I remember well on the top of the ravine, where two guns of the A Battery tried to dislodge the Indians from their rifle pits, a number of the gunners were wounded and some killed trying to depress the guns enough to fire into the pits; as they were the old nine-pound muzzle loaders, they had to run back each time they fired and reload and run up to the edge of the ravine to fire. As there were no ambulance men, Dr. Rolston also attended to these men under fire in an exposed position. I thought I would like to mention this, as, so far as I know, no official notice was ever made of it; probably Major Boulton never heard about this very gallant work.

DUNCAN RESIDENT

I might say that Dr. Rolston was for some time practising in Duncan and died there at a ripe old age. He has two sons living there now, W. P. M. Rolston and Dr. Cecil Rolston, retired. Major Boulton died many years ago; he was made a Senator. His widow, I see from The Winnipeg Tribune, is now residing in Winnipeg, in good health and eighty-three years old. She gave a long interview to that paper on the fiftieth anniversary of 1885.

Dr. P. M. Rolston had served in the Baltic, 1854-55; in the Maori War in New Zealand, 1865-68, and was fleet surgeon on His Majesty's Ship Impregnable, 1873-76.

It has been related that at the battle of Fish Creek General Middleton's fur cap was shot off his head. This is a fact, as I was standing close by at the time. He had ridden up to see how the A Battery guns were getting along, and there had been a lot of casualties in that sector, and he persisted in keeping on his horse, despite the protests of his staff. It was lucky for General Middleton that Gabriel Dumont, as we found out afterwards, had left the field with a party of his men. This incident occurring in the afternoon, I don't think that General Middleton would have left the field alive. It was at this point of the ravine where we had a number of casualties; we had been in support of the guns and some of us helped the gunners manoeuvre their guns. In conclusion, I would like to say that it was not my intention to try to give a detailed account of the history of this campaign.

A detailed account can be found in Major Boulton's book of 1888. These are the personal recollections of the doings of an aggregation of men banded together by a gallant gentlemen who were trying to do their duty in an emergency, and I do think that it should be of interest to all loyal Canadians, especially the younger members of the Native Sons of Canada. There is no doubt that this trouble was fomented by the insane hatred and jealousy of one man who had personal ambitions, causing the death of many innocent men and the expenditure of about $3,000,000. I think that it was generally conceded that General Middleton handled the situation in a prompt and efficient manner. Also the Canadian Militia deserve the credit they then received for their splendid forced marches through ice and snow on the North shore of Lake Superior, and the transporting of about 400 men in some cases nearly 2,000 miles.

Jane Dixon Says:

GIRLS COMPLAIN THAT MEN SAY THEY LOVE THEM BUT ARE ALWAYS MAKING EXCUSES

If you sat on the receiving end of this column, as I do, you would become discouraged with women.

I know dozens of fine, free, up-and-coming women.

Many of them are wives and mothers, working in and for their homes.

Many of them are bachelor girls, filling positions with credit to themselves and to all women.

I am always shocked and a little bit sad when letters are received from girls or from women who have not kept pace with the age in which they live. When they ask such foolish questions as:

"Shall I try to make this dumbbell, this boob, this cheater, this worshipper of the god of Self, love me, or shall I go out and find someone else, another man, who will take care of me?"

You would think, to read so many of these letters, that love and marriage came in a grab bag.

AN OVER-THE-PHONE COURTSHIP

Dear Miss Dixon.—Every time the boy I've been going with plans to come to see me, he gets sick or something happens. Do you think he is tired of me? He calls me up nearly every day.

I care so much for him. If you were I, would you find someone else, or would you go with him, regardless. He says he loves me, and that if he ever sees me with another man he will be through; yet he goes with other girls. He tells me so himself. Can you suggest anything for me to do?—Worried.

Answer: I can suggest plenty of things for you to do, but getting a woman of your type to do them is something else again.

I do not know whether the man is tired of you or not. The reason he does not come to see you is beside the issue. The fact is, he does not come to see you.

He tells you about going with other women, but informs you that if you go about with your men friends he is "through for good."

I wouldn't wait for him to notify me he was "through." I'd tell him myself.

Men of his type are by no means unusual. Scores of them come to my desk. They are ego-centrics—which, translated, means, they are centered on themselves. They get a great kick out of the power to wield a club over a woman for whom they have only the most casual regard.

Stop answering the phone. Tell your young man that if he wants to talk with you, he may call on you in person.

FIFTEEN YEARS A FIANCEE BUT NEVER A BRIDE

Dear Jane Dixon.—I am forty and should know better, but somehow I can't make up my mind to let go of the man I've been going with for fifteen years.

At least two dozen times in this period we've set a date for our wedding, but always something happens to put it off. Recently I sat myself down to ask what it was all about. I discovered that not once have I put forth a reason for cancelling our wedding date. His mother is sick, times are too bad, he has to go on a business trip, he wants to get a certain house, but it won't be empty for another year.

It's gone on that way all this time until now he no longer bothers to find a good excuse. He just says, "Let's wait a while; plenty of time."

Now I find he's seeing a lot of a girl in his office. He takes her places he never took me and spends plenty of money doing it, though the reason we have not married is largely a matter of money. She's at least ten years younger than I am and full of fun. I was full of fun, too, when I first knew this man, but there's not much laugh left in me. Shall I try to see it through, or would it be better for me to give him up and look for other interests?—Tired.

Answer: There is no need to worry about giving your man up, because he must have given you up at least fourteen years ago. I can't tell you why he has two-timed you, but reading between the lines of your letter—I only print a part of it—I'd say that he has gone on clowning because you have been a convenience to him and because he lacked the stamina to tell you the truth.

Why not sit down again, and have your reluctant man sit with you. Tell him you are fixing a final wedding date. Let him know you mean business. If he has an excuse for your date, let it be the last one and set out from that round-up to find other interests.

Donates Bicycle To Hospital for X-Ray Department

The X-ray department of Royal Jubilee Hospital has a new piece of equipment—a bicycle. It was donated by Dr. Thomas Miller, the hospital board was advised at a monthly meeting Friday night.

Purpose of the bicycle, the rear wheel of which is mounted on a stand, is to provide a certain physical exertion for patients during special X-ray examinations, it was explained.

EXPORT MUCH OF PROVINCE PAPER

Thomas Scott Tells Credit Association 75 Per Cent of B.C. Pulp Shipped Away

Approximately 75 per cent of the total tonnage of paper produced in British Columbia was exported, declared Thomas Scott, of the Columbia Paper Company, in an address on "Paper," delivered Friday before the regular luncheon meeting of the Victoria Credit Granters' Association in the Douglas Cafe.

Mr. Scott pointed out that so many types of paper were produced that it was impossible for any one mill to manufacture all the varieties of paper used. The machinery for transforming wood and rags, the latter used in the higher-priced bond paper into pulp was extremely costly, he declared.

"Good stationery makes a good impression. So why not use it?" Mr. Scott continued. "A business letter is cheap to write, the cost of the paper amounting to 4 per cent of the total output on the cost of the letter," he added.

PROCESS EXPLAINED

Seventeen brands of paper, ranging from newsprint to costly bond paper, were presented as samples by the speaker. He explained each brand and the process through which it passed before emerging as the finished product.

Newsprint was made from mechanical pulp, he declared. "Ninety-five per cent of the newsprint produced in the Dominion of Canada is exported," stated Mr. Scott. At the Powell River pulp mills, some 650 tons of newsprint were manufactured daily, the speaker remarked.

Bond paper was made mainly from spruce and hemlock and similar trees, except for the highly expensive product, which was manufactured from pure unused rags.

The old bachelor didn't like the wheezy musician playing Christmas carols outside his window. At last he could stand it no longer. He opened the front door and shook his fist angrily at the man.

"What do you mean by making this infernal row out here?" he asked.

"I'm one of the waits," said the musician.

"One of the waits, eh?" snapped the old fellow. "Well, tie yourself round your neck and go and throw yourself in the river."

Prepare for First School Sports Meet

QUATSIÑO, April 27.—The school teachers and sports committees of Quatsino, Port Alice and Port Hardy are all busily engaged getting their sports teams trained for the big May 24 sports at Quatsino. ## DONATIONS ARE ACKNOWLEDGED

Royal Jubilee Hospital Received Two Financial Requests From Estates

Many contributions were received by the Royal Jubilee Hospital last month, it was announced at a meeting of this hospital board Friday night. Directors expressed their appreciation of the gifts.

A bequest of $800 from the executors of the estate of the late John T. Taylor was acknowledged, as was the bequest of $164.28 from B. S. Heisterman, executor of the estate of the late Charles S. Bird.

HOSPITAL DAY

Two wheel chairs, and a sterilizer for the fourth floor south, were donated by the Senior Women's Auxiliary. The Esquimalt Women's Institute made a gift of linen, and the Junior Auxiliary of the hospital was thanked for assistance rendered in connection with the social service work and preparation of a large quantity of operating room supplies.

The Florence Nightingale Chapter, I.O.D.E., will serve tea in the institution on Hospital Day, May 12, it was stated.

LETTERS READ

Several letters were read from appreciative patients, highly praising the treatment and attention they had received while in the hospital.

Reports showed a slight increase in the number of patients treated during March of this year and the corresponding month in 1934. The number of days' treatment for last month was 7,714, as compared to 7,410 in March, 1934. During March, 1935, the average number of patients per day was 240, as against 239 for the corresponding month last year. The cost per diem was $3.03, and including X-ray and laboratory

END that HEADACHE

Any kind of headache demands more than just a sedative. It demands the quick, effective action of Bromo-Seltzer—an action that quickly blocks out the pain and then helps remove the cause. Bromo-Seltzer's five medicinal ingredients change fatigue causing acids to alkali... quickly... and thus calm nerves, sweeten the stomach and restore vigorous freshness. Get one of the four economical sizes; or order a Bromo-Seltzer at any drug store soda fountain.

Vivid Picturization of Orczy Novel at Capitol

During the next few days people will be "hurry home" from the Capitol Theatre after seeing that beautifully filmed thriller, "The Scarlet Pimpernel," which is playing at the Capitol Theatre, to hunt up an old copy of the book by the Baroness Orczy and see how nearly Leslie Howard, as Sir Percy Blakeney, followed the text, and to read with the picture in their mind of the villainous Chauvelin, as played by Raymond Massey.

One will have to see this famous fool and his foil, the villain, to realize what a tragedy it would have been had not their creator created them, as it were, accidentally. The Baroness told of the narrow escape herself when she visited Toronto.

She and her English husband were living in modest lodgings in London, sharing in the joys and sorrows of family life, when one day the husband won a prize for a story. The baroness, a Hungarian by birth, went upstairs thinking and thinking hard. Finally she said to her husband that she didn't see why she shouldn't write a story, too. Husband-like, he said he didn't see why she should.

But the idea persisted, and so one of the most engaging characters in fiction was created—the young English nobleman who, with a few brave and adventurous youths of his own calibre, saved many a head from the guillotine in the days of "The Terror" in France and brought them safe to England.

"TORCH SINGER" IS AT PLAYHOUSE

Claudette Colbert Has Starring Role in "The Gilded Lily"—Good Supporting Cast

Claudette Colbert's golden singing voice, object of many radio offers, but heard only once before on the screen in "Torch Singer," is a feature of her new Paramount film, "The Gilded Lily," coming tomorrow to the Playhouse Theatre.

With several numbers, written especially for her by Arthur Johnston and Sam Coslow, Miss Colbert's specialty is a song called "Something About Romance."

In "The Gilded Lily," from an original story by Melville Baker and Jack Kirkland, Claudette Colbert has two leading men, Fred MacMurray and Ray Milland, both comparative newcomers to the screen. C. Aubrey Smith, Edward Craven and George Bradley are in the supporting cast.

"The Gilded Lily" presents Miss Colbert as a hard-working stenographer with one ambition in life—to marry a poor man and strive with

ALDERMAN BREAKS SEVERAL RIBS IN FALL

KAMLOOPS, B.C., April 26 (CP).—Tumbling off a chair while fixing a blind in his residence, Alderman D. B. Johnston, former mayor of the city, fractured several ribs and will be confined to the hospital for ten days.

KITCHENER PLANT RAZED

KITCHENER, Ont., April 27 (CP).—The plant of the Kitchener Woodworkers, Limited, one of the city's biggest furniture factories, was destroyed by fire early today. Damage was estimated at $25,000 and fifty men will be thrown out of work.

Authentic War Pictures Show Futility of Battle

Now showing at the Dominion Theatre is the epic story of Canadian participation in the Great War. It is unfolded in the Canadian Government's official war film, "Lest We Forget," exhibited under the auspices of the Canadian Legion, a release reproduced with "sound" and culled from hundreds of thousands of feet of film, "lost" for more than ten years in the basement of a Government building in Ottawa.

An advisory committee composed of men identified with the war period portrayed, assisted the technical workers in stringing together a vivid picture of the hostilities. The committee included Major-General A. G. MacNaughton, Colonel A. Fortescue Duguid, Captain William Douglas,

Captain F. C. Badgley and Dr. A. G. Doughty, Dominion architect.

To the extent that these war films were photographed at the time on the occasion of the event they portray, they are history—a record whose accuracy cannot be gainsaid. And the fascination of learning history by that medium lies in seeing the personalities, who made it, actually in their creative process on the screen.

Many of them have died since the close of the war, their names only a memory and their achievements scarcely even known by the new generation that has grown up. Their resurrection in this fashion discloses the motion picture fulfilling a task, the value of which it is difficult to over-estimate.

ROCK GARDENS ARE DISCUSSED

John A. Grant Gives Lists Of Plants and Hints on Layout

Choosing and placing shrubs in a rock garden determine its general character, and are matters to be studied carefully, John A. Grant told an audience of fifty persons at the Empress Hotel, Friday evening, in his talk on "Planning and Planting a Rock Garden."

Mr. Grant exhibited colored lantern slides of many varieties of shrubs and flowers suitable for a rock garden. Saxifrage, he said, must have its roots kept cool or sometimes it refused to flower. It grew best facing north, or northeast, and bloomed a second time after flowers were picked.

Color, he asserted, was not the only element to consider in a rock garden. It must have the right sense of proportion, with the biggest sweep of color at the top. Plants sometimes failed because they were not in their right aspect or soil and did not get perfect drainage as they did in their native soil. Some rock gardens were nothing but collections of perfectly-grown plants, with improper spacing, color combinations and play of light and shade.

Some of the plants and shrubs Mr. Grant recommended for rock gardens were dwarf juniper, phlox, miniature daffodils, dwarf pine, heather, Chinese anemones, dwarf rhododendron, primulas, hybrid broom, water lily tulips and angel's tears daffodils. He mentioned that native plants such as manzanita, calypso, cowslips, groundsel and reeds could also be used to advantage.

MONTREAL, April 27 (CP).—Heavy profit-taking sales by traders on the belief the United States Government was not carrying out its expressed intention to force the price of silver up to $1.29 an ounce by steady buying, today caused a veritable rout in the Canadian Commodity Exchange. A new record turnover for a Saturday session was chalked up in hectic dealings, when 134 contracts changed hands. The previous record, set two weeks ago, was seventy-eight contracts.

LARGE ENTRY EXPECTED FOR GOLF TOURNEY

Jubilee Handicap Meet at Colwood Links Attracting Big Interest

With an energetic committee working in co-operation, plans for the Victoria Jubilee golf handicap tournament, which will be staged at the Royal Colwood Club, May 4, 5 and 6, were going ahead without a hitch yesterday, and indications are that a large field of Victoria and outside devotees of the royal and ancient pastime will tee off. The tournament is open to all golfers, and officials want to make it clear that it is not an invitational meet as some people think. Entries will be received at the Empress Hotel or with the secretary of the Colwood Club any time this week.

A handsome trophy has been donated by Lieutenant-Governor J. W. Fordham Johnson, while Hon. T. D. Pattullo, Premier of the Province, Mayor David Leeming and Hon. John Hart, Minister of Finance, have presented trophies for the three-day tournament. Prizes have also been donated by the Empress Hotel for the low net scores turned in by the visiting lady and man. Numerous other awards given by local merchants will be distributed on the final day.

LOST MEMBERS NOT FORGOTTEN

"The year now closing forms no exception to the general experience. There are here the names of members whose presence and activities have been so notable that we cannot yet realize that they have gone. There are also names of younger men who have passed to the beyond before their lives reached full flower, but yet whose devotion was no less than that of those whom we have known for longer years. We pass now to the reading of the names of those who for the first time cannot answer our roll call."

DISTINGUISHED NAMES

As he read the roll of distinguished names, which included those of Publisher Matson, of The Daily Colonist, Adolph Ochs, publisher, and Louis Wiley, business manager of The New York Times; Fremont Older, editor of The San Francisco Call-Bulletin, and more than a score of others, Mr. Brown paused as the group rose in a body to stand for a moment of silent tribute.

Then he continued:
"Each of these names indicates deep personal loss in the community represented and the sum total of all makes a shadow over this membership. The shadow lifts as we reflect on the lasting benefaction we have had in knowing and associating with these fellow-workers."

"We see them revealed as earnest, far-seeing men engaged in an exacting profession that never relaxes its demands for eternal vigilance and unwavering rectitude. How well they have wrought we know and whereof we have added to the great bulk of achievements that have characterized journalism in their day and generation. We note the vacant places where they stood and press on in the work in which they helped so nobly. Peace to their ashes and prosperity to the high ideals that animated their lives."

"It is obvious that as survivors we cannot pass unheeding the ravages of time. The least we can do is to realize the debt we owe to association with these our comrades. One thing more. We can express to those immediately concerned a sense of appreciation of their loss. To that end, we resolve to direct the proper officers of the association to send the family of each of the deceased brothers, a copy of this expression of our sympathy."

VICTORIA CONTINGENT

The Victoria group left the city at 8 o'clock in the morning from the City Hall, and was led by Mayor David Leeming, Reeve Mayhew, of Oak Bay, and Reeve Crouch, of Saanich, with Herbert Anson, M.P.P., Harold Husband and T. H. Kelick, secretary of the Tourist Association. The cavalcade was accompanied by the Gizeh Temple Shrine Band at full strength. All along the route the Victoria delegation was joined by other groups. Stops were made at Cobble Hill, Duncan, Chemainus and Ladysmith, at which places the delegations were warmly welcomed by the civic officials and citizens. At several of the stops welcome banners were displayed across the streets. Each car in the caravan bore a printed sign of identification. A decorated automobile of the Ladysmith Cherry Growers' Association joined the caravan at the Ladysmith stop. It was driven by J. A. Hartley and created considerable interest on its arrival at Nanaimo.

PARADE TO GROUNDS

Following the arrival at Nanaimo and the official welcome to the visitors, the delegations were given an intermission between 1:10 o'clock and 2 o'clock for lunch. At 2:30 o'clock all groups and guests assembled at the Pygmy Pavilion for the official parade to the sports grounds. Several hundred delegates and citizens joined in the half-mile march, which was led by the Gizeh Temple Band and the Nanaimo Band.

Hundreds of others lined the streets to witness the finish of the bicycle grind from Victoria to Nanaimo over the Malahat by a dozen or so riders. Neil Duval, of Royal Oak, was the winner of the seventy-seven-mile "sprint," doing the distance in the remarkably fast time of four hours and twenty-four minutes. He was six minutes ahead of J. Newman, of Saanich, who led Ted Whitehead, of Royal Oak, by eighteen minutes. Duval and Newman finished in good physical condition, but Whitehead was exhausted when he crossed the finish line.

SEE SOCCER FINAL

After the finish of the bicycle race, the crowds continued to the sports field, where the visitors saw a hotly-contested soccer match between Park Rangers and South Wellington for the Sagatin Cup. The Rangers won the cup by two goals to one, and with it the junior championship for the island. The stands were crowded to capacity to witness the game.

From 3:30 to 4:30 o'clock, Mrs. John Barsby, wife of Nanaimo's popular mayor, and Mrs. T. H. Eslick presided at a tea musicale in the Malaspina Hotel, which was attended by a large gathering of ladies from the different cities and districts represented.

At 3:30 o'clock, mayors, reeves, commissioners and appointed community delegates went into conference at the Pygmy Pavilion, and later in the afternoon a conference of newspaper writers was held in the council chamber of the City Hall, under the chairmanship of R. Hindmarch, publisher of The Nanaimo Herald. At 7 o'clock, the doors of the Pavilion were opened to the public, and prior to the start of the mass meeting, R. Coveney led community singing, and the Shrine Band gave a number of selections. The meeting commenced at 7:30 o'clock, with Mayor Barsby in the chair, and concluded at 11 o'clock, when visiting delegates were escorted to their starting point for home by a torchlight procession through the streets of the city, which were gallantly decorated with colored electric lights.

The whole affair, from beginning to end, was an unqualified success. The weather was ideal, and the generous welcome accorded the visitors at all points testified to the interest the movement is creating and the spirit of co-operation so graciously extended the delegates. In addition to the efforts of the people of Nanaimo, the delegations received assistance from the Boy Scouts, members of the Provincial and civic police forces and were shown every courtesy by civic officials at all points along the route of the northern and southern tours.

It is estimated that between forty and fifty automobiles swept into Nanaimo between 11 and 1 o'clock, the time set for the official reception by Mayor John Barsby. The Up-Island delegation entered Nanaimo on schedule time, 12:30 o'clock, and proceeded direct to the courthouse to be welcomed by Mayor Barsby and other civic officials. The Victoria and Lower Island contingents arrived shortly after 1 o'clock and were received at a specially-constructed reviewing stand in front of the firehall.

COUNT DEFEATS MIKE STRELICH

Wary "Old Fox" Trims Young Opponent in Mat Event—Columbo Wins

Experience triumphed over youth last night in the weekly squirm fest at Promoter Fred Richardson's Tullium gym, when Count George Zarynoff, 212 pounds, took two falls to one from Mike Strellich, 223-pound Yugoslavian wrestler in a sweet match as the first time the two met. All the holds in the book and a few more were displayed by the two and they fought cleanly for the five rounds.

In the semi-windup, Pat Reilly, 210 pounds, Boston, found that his dirty tactics were not enough to whip Casey Colombo, sturdy matman from Santa Monica, when the latter ended a scheduled five eight-minute-round affair in the fourth, taking the two falls out of three.

In local preliminaries, George Lowe, Chinese flash, wrestled to victory over Bill Steen, while Reg Hopkins proved too strong for "Legs" Hays, up and coming local product. Strellich took the first fall in the third round when he rolled the Count into a body scissors and a body press. In the next session the Count's long experience stood him in good stead for when Strellich picked him up for a body slam, the Count swung in midair and caught Mike in a head scissors for the tying fall. The pair did a double flip in the fifth round and the Count landed on top to take the match.

Johnny Pears, referee, showed plenty of fight in handling the bruising semi, when, to quiet Reilly, who ripped Pears' shirt from his back and persisted in gouging Colombo, the referee fractured his own finger in landing a perfect smash to Reilly's jaw.

Reilly took the first fall in the opening canto with a body press, while Colombo evened in the third with a body press. Forty seconds after the start of the fourth round, Colombo bounded in, rolled Reilly heavily and pounced on him for the deciding fall.

HIGH HAT PETERSEN

Prior to his knockout defeat by Walter Neusel, there was no such "high hat" champion as Jack Petersen, of Wales. He scooped at a chance to go to Boston to fight Max Bear for the world's title. He wanted Bear to come to England. He wouldn't fight Len Harvey because he was "too busy." Now he isn't busy at all. He just regrets the invasion of Neusel.

STORIED SPOTS FROM SEA TO SEA

The Pierced Rock of Gaspé

LE PIERCE, the pierced rock of the Gaspé Coast, is world famous as a geographical oddity. But for Canadians the region is dear for its historical and legendary associations as well. The great part that the Gaspé Coast played in the early chapters of Canada's history, beginning with Cartier's landing in 1534, needs no emphasis. By the rock, Bishop Laval landed in 1659 to celebrate his first Mass in New France and visit the scattered parishes of the east on his way to Quebec.

Jutting out more than 1,400 feet into the sea, Percé Rock is joined to Mount Joli, on the mainland, by a low sandbar which is covered at high tide. The majestic rock-island towers nearly 300 feet into the air at its prow-shaped landward end, being considerably lower at the broader seaward end. Its remarkable feature is the high archway which pierces it near the seaward end, high enough for a thirty-foot mast to pass through. Some sixty years ago this generous opening was reported to be but a few inches broad. Beyond the main mass of rock is a mighty column, the outer upright of another huge arch long since collapsed.

The power of the sea, steadily wearing the island away, is illustrated by early accounts of the pierced rock. Nicholas Denys, prominent in the early history of Acadia, first saw but one arch. On a later voyage there were three, one of which had fallen in. In 1815 one arch could accommodate the passage of a ship. Even now new arches are in the process of formation, and, as the rock crumbles away, fossils of scientific interest are revealed. Native and early French-Canadian legend naturally weaves many tales around this fantastic rock. We are told that it represents the crumbling ruins of a bridge built by the giants to nearby Bonaventure Island from Mount Joli. Both Bonaventure and Percé are also famed as bird sanctuaries.

"No, everything's going fine. You needn't worry. My bankers will guarantee me all right."

Treasures Are Dug From Garbage Pits Of Egyptian Sands

Excavations of Past Forty Years Disclose Life of Ancients and Unearth Valuable Christian Documents, Culminating in Recently-Published Fragments of Fifth Gospel

AMONG the most intriguing episodes of literary history have been the various discoveries of literary treasures among the garbage pits of ancient Egyptian towns, where the contents of the waste-paper baskets of the inhabitants were dumped perhaps for centuries. Buried for some two thousand years in the dry soil of a rainless country, documents that are rated of great value to modern scholarship have been unearthed during the last fifty years and salvaged in the museums of the world.

A curious characteristic of the ancient Egyptian, during the centuries immediately before and after the coming of the Lord, that is, the Graeco-Roman era, was that, instead of burning the contents of the waste-baskets or any accumulated litter of written material, he shot them on his domestic rubbish-heap, not without tearing them across in most cases, but generally without so mutilating them as to render them illegible or incomprehensible.

No doubt it was a very bad habit, as one writer has observed, from the point of view of prudence and privacy, and the folks who were guilty of it would doubtless have done very differently had they known that their private correspondence, their accounts of domestic squabbles, their business affairs, the very lists of things which they had been obliged to deposit with that useful but undesirable friend, the pawnbroker, were going to be unearthed two thousand years after they were dead and published broadcast. All the same, we may be thankful for the carelessness or the confiding quality of these same Egyptians and Greeks of these centuries, for the revelations of the frail papyrus of the ashpits have given a vivid view of the actual human life of those days.

DISCLOSES FAMILY LIFE

An illustration of the intimate disclosure of, for example, family relationship, is the much-quoted letter of young Theon, the spoiled boy, to Theon, the elder, his father. The father had slipped away on a trip down the Nile without taking his boy along. Theon, in protesting, junior wrote thus: "Theon to Theon his father, greeting. You did not take me along with you to the city. If you refuse to take me along with you to Alexandria, I won't write you a letter, or speak to you, or wish you health. And if you do go to Alexandria, I won't take your hand, or greet you again henceforth. . . . send for me, then, I beseech you. If you do not send, I won't eat. I won't drink."

Of a different temper is the letter of condolence, written in the second century by Irene, evidently a pagan, to her bereaved friends: "Irene to Taonophris and Philo, good cheer! I was as much grieved and shed as many tears over Eumeros or the blessed one as I shed for Diogenes, and I did everything that was fitting (referring to funeral ceremonial rites). . . . But still there is nothing one can do in the face of such trouble. So I leave you to comfort yourselves."

Irene does her best, but there is nothing more remarkable, as James Baikie comments, than the contrast between such letters of the best pagans of the time, with their blank admission of hopelessness in the face of death and the Christian outlook of the same period.

PIONEERS OF EXCAVATION
Although papyrus documents have been discovered since the latter part of the eighteenth century, it is but forty years ago that papyrus-hunting was scientifically begun, first in 1895 by Messrs. Hogarth, Grenfell and Hunt in the Fayum district, and then with wonderful success by the latter two in 1897. They began work at Oxyrhynchus, the modern Behnesah, a town on the edge of the western desert, about 120 miles from Cairo.

Here, among the rubbish mounds, the picks and shovels unearthed a veritable Golconda of literary treasure trove. On the very first day excavators struck an almost inexhaustible vein of ancient documents. On the second day a crumpled scrap of papyrus was found, which, examined a few days later by Dr. Hunt, was found to contain an inscription in Uncial Greek characters the word Karpophos, "Mote," which at once suggested to him the saying of Jesus about the mote and the beam.

That was an exciting day, for this was the first of many discoveries of papyrus fragments bearing on the Gospel story. The initial find had the distinction of being not much later than the third-century A.D., probably not much later than A.D. 300, that is, a century older than the oldest manuscripts of the New Testament. During the succeeding ten years, from 1897-1907, many other fragments of the Gospel story were brought to light.

SAYINGS OF JESUS

The principal of these are two collections of the sayings of Jesus which are called the Logia. The reproduction of a few of these will interest the reader. Of the First Logia three are transcribed:

Logion II.—Jesus saith, except ye fast to the world, ye shall in no wise find the kingdom of God; and except ye make the Sabbath a real Sabbath, ye shall not see the Father.

Logion III.—Jesus saith, I stood in the midst of the world, and in the flesh was I seen of them, and I found all men drunken, and none found I at least among them, and my soul grieveth over the sons of men, because they are blind in their heart, and see not.

Logion V.—Jesus saith, Wherever ye go, and wherever there is one alone, I say, I am with him. Raise the stone, and there thou shalt find me, cleave the wood, and there am I. . . . This last is one of the most striking of the sayings. It is a beautiful statement of the omnipresence of God.

From a second set of the sayings of Jesus, discovered in 1902 by Messrs. Grenfell and Hunt at Oxyrhynchus, the following excerpts are made: Introduction:—These are the (wonderful) words which Jesus the living (lord) spake to . . . and Thomas, and He said unto (them). Every one that hearkens to these words shall never taste of death.

Logion I.—Jesus saith, Let not him who seeks . . . cease until he finds, and when he finds he shall be astonished; astonished he shall reach the kingdom, and having reached the kingdom, he shall rest.

THE LATEST FIND

What has been written regarding the long-buried papyrus sheets and rolls, and more especially of those connected with Christianity, suggest the reasons for the interest in the two or three bits of brown and brittle papyrus which several months ago caught the eye of the librarian of the British Museum. Scanning the faded Greek manuscript, he noted two letters, I E, the first letters of Jesus, the Greek form of Jesus, that were commonly used as an abbreviation of the name.

The librarian, Dr. H. Idris Bell, and others think that the fragments belong to a fifth Gospel. But what part of Egypt they come from no one knows. The librarian bought it from the junkmen who peddle such things to the libraries and museums of the world. But what if the whole of the fifth Gospel were found? The fragments have been published with annotations, and the book is likely to be a "best seller." But what might not Britain gain for the complete story? In a case near by is the Codex Sinaiticus, for which the Museum recently paid half a million dollars, a vellum manuscript of the Bible inscribed about 325 A.D. The fragments were written 200 years, perhaps, earlier than the highly-prized Codex. Again, what would the Museum pay for the complete fifth story?

Digging Deep in Cariboo

H.C. MacCallum

One of Diesel Units

Bottom of Melvin Shaft

AT Lightning Creek, in the Cariboo district, there is a new placer development that bids fair to bring wealth and fame to British Columbia mining. It is an old property, known to be rich, that has been the scene of a treasure hunt for the last three decades. Expenditure of huge sums of money failed to bring successful recovery of the riches, and last year control passed into the hands of British shareholders. Now the company, known as Consolidated Gold Alluvials of British Columbia, Ltd., financed in Great Britain and with adequate funds available to bring the property to production, has embarked on a large-scale developmental programme under a system that is new to this province and this Dominion.

The company's property extends from the mouth of Lightning Creek upstream nearly to the old town of Stanley. It is twenty-one miles long, and the company plans to mine it over practically the entire front. Operations centre at Wingdam, thirty-two miles from Quesnel on the main road from Quesnel to Barkerville. About 120 men are employed there at present, and the force eventually will total about 400 to 500 as the operations become the largest of the kind in the province and among the largest in the world.

Gold Everywhere

PRODUCTION of gold gives promise of reaching considerable dimensions. D. Campbell Mackenzie, eminent British mining engineer with an enviable record of successes in Australian fields, is general manager and technical adviser. He has reported to his directors, "My experience so far in the valley of Lightning Creek seems to be summed up in the following trite saying, 'Turn a sod anywhere and you'll get some trace of gold.' In connection with the company's drilling operations, he stated, "Quite frankly, in all my experience of 'deep lead' mining in Australia, I have never known drilling values to equal those obtained from the 'H' line. (The 'H' line is a series of drill holes sunk to bedrock across the ancient bed of Lightning Creek, now covered by between 160 and 190 feet of overburden that is the present-day bed of the stream.)

One of the drill holes in the 'H' line showed an average value of 175 dwts. per square fathom, another 473 dwts. per square fathom and the average for the line was 324 dwts. The average of values obtained in six lines of drill holes was 282 dwts. per square fathom. (In each case, arithmetical averages.)

To translate these values into other terms, Mr. Mackenzie estimates mining costs at $20 per square fathom and with gold selling at $30 an ounce it would take values equal to 13.5 dwts. per square fathom to cover production costs. "Thus values indicated by drilling are many times greater than those required to meet costs, and the possibilities for handsome profits are highly encouraging. From one operation, mining at the rate of 50 square fathoms a day, Mr. Mackenzie estimates a gross profit of $1,050,000 in a year if values are only 60 dwts. per fathom.

With such phenomenal results as the possible outcome, one wonders what has been going on up to the present. After initial successes in the earlier days, for thirty years different operators have been endeavoring to wrest the riches from the ancient bed of Lightning Creek. Time after time success was believed to be just around the corner, but when one corner was turned another appeared. So work on Lightning Creek was delayed, interrupted or postponed. Some of the causes contributing to failure were complete absence of a well-thought-out policy of underground mining development, inadequate power, and lack of co-ordination of drilling records. Behind these causes was the fact that money for the work came in "drips and drabs" and there were never sufficient funds available for comprehensive and systematic planning and development.

The Problem of "Slum"

ANOTHER obstacle was the "slum" problem, arising usually at a time when other barriers appeared to have been hurdled. Cariboo "slum" is a water-soaked formation that lies atop of the gold-bearing gravels. When tapped it moves with an irresistible force, like molasses flowing from a burst tank. It cannot be shoveled, it is in too great volume to be bailed by hand methods and it cannot be pumped because the fine gritty particles wear out the moving parts of a machine like sandpaper against an automobile tire.

In his studies of the "slum" problem, Mr. Mackenzie has found that the material, robbed of its water pressure, becomes an inert, lifeless mass that could be safely mined. This "slum," he found, had the same characteristics as the "silt" formation that is associated with the auriferous gravels in the Australian placer fields, so it is not unnatural that his development plans call for the same general methods of treatment that proved successful in the Southern Dominion.

The Australian or "deep lead" method of mining is now being applied in the operations of Consolidated Gold Alluvials. This system has never been tried before in this province; so it is that mining men of British Columbia; Great Britain, from whence the capital has come, and Australia are awaiting the outcome of its adaption with considerable interest. If it proves successful, the "deep lead" system will make the gravels of the Cariboo one of the great sources of placer gold supply in the world.

Careful Engineering

IN the Australian "deep lead" method, the de-watering of the gravels before mining is the primary consideration. Until the de-watering is complete no attempt is made to attack the auriferous gravels for their hidden treasure; that operation is separate and distinct in the development of the mine as a whole. De-watering is accomplished by sinking a shaft in the solid rim-rock to a depth of at least forty feet below the bed of the ancient channel. A main rock drive is then driven underneath the "lead" and continued up and down stream. Vertical bore holes are then drilled up into the gravels to thoroughly drain them. The water from these drill holes runs along a box drain to the pump at the bottom of the main shaft, from which point it is pumped up into the sluice boxes, where it is used for washing the gravels. When de-watering has been completed, another cross-cut is then driven from the main shaft to the bed-rock level and the mine developed from that level. In this way the "slum" problem is overcome, and removal of the thick overburden is avoided.

Main Mining Shaft

AT the main operation of Consolidated Gold Alluvials, the shaft that has been sunk for de-watering and hoisting purposes is called the Melvin Shaft. It is a four-compartment shaft that is now completed to about a depth of 280 feet, and it is located to one side of the ancient river bottom, on the rim-rock, to avoid slum.

The company has several other important operations under way. One is known as the Big Bonanza, where development is by the Australian system as a test of the method for adaption elsewhere on the company's holdings, and is an hydraulic mine on an auriferous ferous bench on the south side of Lightning Creek, below Wingdam.

The Bonanza is on an elevated pre-glacial channel at a slight elevation above Lightning Creek. Drainage was not a serious problem and using the drift method it was found that after de-watering, the sand, gravel and "slum" stood up very well and permitted safe mining. Sluice boxes were housed in a specially-constructed heated building, but no attempt was made to heat the water. The whole system functioned perfectly during weather as cold as 35 degrees below zero, and the operations thus became the first in the Cariboo to successfully use creek water during Winter for sluicing. Gold recovery has been quite satisfactory, the yellow metal ranging in size from four pennyweight slugs downward. Previous to starting the operations, prospectors took out sixty ounces of gold containing nuggets up to fourteen pennyweight in weight.

Find Old Channel

DURING earlier exploratory operations an auriferous bench was discovered on the south side of Lightning Creek. Test pits were sunk and it was found that bedrock sloped away from the creek, indicating another old channel. Necessary equipment was installed late last Summer for making a bulk test, and in the short time that remained before freeze-up halted the work, the hydraulic results were indicative of good values in pre-glacial deposits there. Those in charge are optimistic of the future of the bench and are expecting fine results when work is resumed in the Spring.

While the largest of present operations will be centred about the Melvin shaft, it will be some time before actual mining is started there as from fifteen months to two years is necessary for full development to allow a reasonable amount of time for drainage of the "gutter." Present indications are that mining from No. 2 shaft will be underway within a comparatively short time as de-watering has been more rapid than was anticipated.

Early mining of the inter-glacial deposit there is expected and the operators hope to handle twenty-five square fathoms per day. At that rate there would be an annual output of 7,500 square fathoms in a year of 300

THE MARQUIS OF QUICKSILVER

By Frank Leon Smith

NOREEN Hughes, the new reception clerk, didn't see him when he sprang from the elevator, for her telephone was ringing at the moment. He saw her, stopped as though stricken, and instead of going on through a door in the panelled walls of what might have been a royal antechamber, but was the entrance foyer of an advertising agency, he tilted a rakish hat and considered her from different angles, framing her as a photographer might, with upheld hands and thumb tips touching.

As she finished telephoning, a stout man with a cane rose from a cathedral chair and came to her desk. The young man who was inspecting her marked him out, muttering rapidly, "I shall die, I know I shall, for the search of a lifetime is over! The black hair of her, and those lashes fluttering over eyes of blue, while the shy maidenly blushes sweep the glorious face and neck! Perfect! Perfect! The simple blue dress and naive collar and cuffs—the charming curves and contours—and while one leg is concealed by the desk, I have no reason to doubt it is the exact mate to the lovely lower limb I see so coyly tucked under the chair!"

Noreen, who could not know she had passed the examination of an expert, smiled at the stout man and said, "You are to go right in. Do you know your way?"

The stout man did. He went within, leaving his cane. The young man dropped his hat on a chair and came to her as though from an inner office, saying, "Good morning, good morning, good morning!"

She looked up at him, smiled and rendered a blush that transcended all previous efforts. He was slender, wide-shouldered, flawless in a dove-grey suit, and blue tie. His hair was sandy, his eyebrows heavy; his face at once merry, bold and so rudely that if he were an older man he'd be called lord.

Her inspection of him had to be made rapidly, for this was a fast fellow indeed, and as he finished the last of his cheery "Good mornings!" he conjured pen and pencil to his hands.

"John Markey," he said, and bowed. "Chief of our bureau of vital statistics. Your name, please?"

"Noreen Hughes," she answered, responding to his quick tempo.

"Your age?"

"Twenty-two."

"Hair—eyes—teeth—perfect. Nose, straight, short. Your address?"

She told him.

"Let's see—married or single?"

"Single," she answered.

"Live alone, or with your parents?"

"With my father."

"Excellent! Excellent! Couldn't be better, Miss Hughes!" Pad and pencil flew back to pockets. His hands flew to coat-tails, lapels, forelock and tie. "It's one of my duties to escort new employees—let's see, I can't, this noon. Shall we say dinner tonight?"

"Why—Mr. Markey—what for? I mean—is it customary?"

"It is one of our strictest rules of personnel. Beastsy bore, at times, and in your case I'd be willing to score you A-plus in advance, but you see, Miss Hughes, we must make sure of our employees' deportment in public—er—just a formality, but let's get it over with, tonight."

"I have an engagement tonight."

"Tomorrow, then. Six-ish? Good!"

SHE didn't think he could have noticed it, in the few moments taken up by this interview, but now he seized the cane, overlooked by the stout man, and of all things limped off inside like a very lame man using a cane much too short for him.

"Well, what shall I say when that man comes back and wants his cane?" she thought. Being a truthful girl, she was amazed when she caught herself compounding little evasions, if not outright falsehoods. "Well, if I'm not a goose! Why—I bet he doesn't have to take me out to dinner! And all those questions!"

And then her heart softened—and whose wouldn't?—for a messenger, a grinning messenger, came from the elevators with the cane. Attached to the cane with a blue ribbon was a gorgeous red rose wrapped in tissue. And a little note: "Keep me in mind constantly until tomorrow evening at six. After that leave everything to John Markey."

Fortunately there were no visitors at the moment. When the messenger left she hurriedly detached the rose, and propped the cane where the stout man had left it. "How nice," she thought, and in modesty added, "And what a friendly gesture—because it is my first day here." Then, without warning, a little voice bellowed at her, "He is the one!"

Startled, she answered back, "Why, he is not! He couldn't be! Things don't happen this way—and besides, he is so unromantic. Why, it's absurd!" She put plenty of score in that unspoken "absurd"—but at the same time she fetched the boss blush of the day.

It was because, of these blushes that Noreen Hughes had this job. She hadn't been hired for her ability to blush. She was to be a secretary, then a copy-writer, and then a full "colleague," at this ritzy staff agency called members of its staff. But first she had to be a "receptionist," so she could get accustomed to meeting business people, so she could get the hang of the office and the names and ways of its people and of the visitors—and so she could get rid of some of her excess blushes.

When she went home she wore the rose, not because of Mr. Markey, but because it was such a nice rose.

Noreen lived in one of a row of houses her father owned in East Fifty-second Street, and she found her father in hilarious session with a crotch of the old horse-and-hack days. Like her father, he had bushy grey hair; but, unlike the rugged countenance of the elder Hughes, this retired and pensioned coachman had a fiery baby face and merry blue eyes. He sprang right up as she came in, put his right hand on his hip, took a precise step forward, at the same time crooking his left arm, until the fingertips just touched the curve of his stomach, and bowed deeply.

"WHY—it's John the Jarvey!" he cried, "How are you, John, and why the courtly gesture?"

They shook hands. "I'm just after telling your father about the count," John Flynn said. "He was a famous rascal and imposter and deadbeat, in the old days. That's the way he used to bow to them wealthy ladies before he swindled them."

"Why, John—I thought that type of man was something new."

"Ah, they always had 'em and they always will. The count had a great system. He was always in a hurry. Never could stop long enough to pay a bill. Always having to use the telephone or see a man. He had very fine manners, the count, and a wonderful way with him—especially when it came to cashing a bad cheque faster than an upright man could cash a good one."

She gave her father a poke and John a friendly pat, and left them to get ready to go to dinner with Walter Kelvin, who was her brother-in-law and came down every so often from Boston, and always brought his dinner clothes so he could take Noreen out, for he was very proud of her and thought that next to her sister she was the most beautiful girl in the world.

She dined with Walter at a roof garden famous for its orchestra, and after Walter had danced with her a couple of times, so that one and all might enjoy the charm of his companion—especially lovely in yellow and chartreuse chiffon—he took her back to their table and to the serious business of the twins.

Walter was never without a fresh packet of snapshots of those young prodigies, Walter O'Donnell Kevin and Michael O'Donnell Kevin. He was explaining, "That's Michael on the left. Huh—bet you thought it was Walter, but it's Michael. Their hair is red, of course, like mine." Then he looked up at her, and glancing beyond, he exclaimed, "Well, what do you know! There's the old Marquis of Quicksilver!"

"What? Who? Where?"

"Don't turn now—he'll think you're staring. If I catch his eye I'll have him over. The old marquis himself! Why, I haven't seen him in—must be six years. And, Noreen—darned if he hasn't caught himself a balloon! Gosh, what a big woman!"

"Balloon, Walter—what are you jabbering about?"

"The marquis. Knew him at Harvard."

"Walter Kevin! If there's a marquis here, I want to see him!"

"Aw, he isn't a real one. We just called him Quicksilver because he was always in such a hurry, and besides, his name is Markey."

"What? Noreen's eyes went wide."

"Look out! Walter muttered. 'Here he comes. Hello, Keed!'"

John Markey stood beside their table, perfect and assured in the full armor of formal evening dress. "Hilloo, what ho! Don't rise, Coningsby!" He thrust Walter back in his seat. "I am in straits. Slip me half a C with the utmost of dispatch!"

Walter grinned at Noreen: "Didn't I tell you he was fast?"

Whereupon he handed fifty dollars to John Markey, who smiled, bowed and walked away.

WALTER was chuckling as he looked off after his friend of other days. "Isn't he a corker? Did you ever hear such a line in your life? He rattles it off like a machine gun!"

She looked to see where Mr. Markey had gone. Instead of returning to his table, he had proceeded to the orchestra, where the leader was speaking quietly into a microphone.

"Well, if he's not the most impossible—I!" she burst out. "He borrowed from you so he could pay the orchestra to play a symphony!"

Walter still was chuckling. "The old marquis always did have the grand manner."

"Well, if you think that's funny, I don't!" She saw the orchestra leader smile at John Markey in understanding, nod, then speak again into the microphone. Her gaze followed Mr. Markey, and then she was more indignant than ever, for he went back to a table where a large, blonde, bediamonded dowager was sitting—a dowager who listened eagerly to what he said, then beamed at him with unconcealed admiration.

The orchestra leader now said to the dinner guests, "By special request—that lovely gem in three-quarter time, 'Starlight Honey-moon and Jasmine.'"

"Now," said Walter, "we'll see the old marquis dance."

Noreen, in exasperation, picked up her little black silk bag. "Walter, get the check, please, and don't forget your snapshots. Let's be at the theatre on time. And if you love me—please—no more about the marquis."

THE next morning, it was perhaps ten o'clock when an elevator door was slammed open with especial force and young Mr. Markey, in a smart brown suit, was expelled into the lobby as from a gun.

"Ah, good morning, good morning, and what a morning! All the birds in the trees were singing to me and saying, with many of the sky look. 'There you go, John Markey, and soon you'll be feasting your eyes on the fairest flower that ever bloomed!' And this very evening she would be gracing your board and hovering daintily over the meat and drink you place before her, were it not—"

"If you are, by chance, referring to me, you are mistaken, Mr. Markey. I am not dining with you."

"How now—and the change that's come over you! Yesterday you were fair leaping at me. And today you greet me with growls and rattling of the chains. This might confuse a lesser man, but John Markey knows you for the gentlest, sweetest guardian of the portal these grim old walls have ever looked down upon."

Blushing, but with every other circumstance of indifference, she was at some small business with filing cards. He leaned on her desk and went on, "I will admit you gave me a bit of a shock last night, dining with a married man—"

"And I thought to myself, 'What a gay dog our Walter has become on these innocent excursions from chaste old Boston! But a Markey is never one to be staying long in doubt. Five minutes' brisk work with the records this morning at the Harvard Club turned up the following, viz., and to wit: 'Kevin, Walter, Married to Hughes, Agnes, et cetera. So I think to myself, 'Hughes, is it? Then she'll be the sister of our own darling Noreen.'"

If he hadn't been an exceptionally rapid talker, he wouldn't have been able to rid himself of this much of opinion, conjecture and conclusion, for she turned on him with flashing eyes. "You—you had the audacity to question the propriety of the company I keep? And you looked up my brother-in-law to see—ah, you are impossible! You, of all people! You are just as detestable as you can be!"

Some men came from the elevator and she turned eagerly to attend to them. She didn't see him leave, but when she had a moment to herself she discovered in the little jar on her desk a fresh red rose—which Mr. Markey must have had under his coat. Also he had managed to write a note on her pad: "For all your fine frenzy she would be gracing my board tonight—only I shall have to go to Baltimore. But I shall return and sue madly for her love. Keep me in mind constantly. Remember that famous slogan: Eventually—Why Not Now?"

Keep him in mind? It was impossible not to. Every day she had a telegram from him, a long, nonsensical night letter—first from Baltimore, then from Washington, Memphis, Louisville, Indianapolis and Chicago. And he must have left word with a florist for every day—although he was gone almost two weeks—a fresh rose was delivered to her desk.

The second Saturday she learned at the office that he'd be back Monday. She was excited at the prospect of seeing him, and she was not a bit displeased. He was something of a rogue, and he was precipitate in manner, but she had to admit he was exciting. Indeed, she was feeling quite kindly toward John Markey when she got home—to

The second Saturday she learned at the office that he'd be back Monday. She was excited at the prospect of seeing him, and she was not a bit displeased. He was something of a rogue, and he was precipitate in manner, but she had to admit he was exciting. Indeed, she was feeling quite kindly toward John Markey when she got home—to find her father once more in conference with John Flynn and some Dublin stout.

"By gorry, it's too bad you missed it, Miss Nora. Your friend, John Markey, was here—"

"What?" She sank into a chair, her cheeks flaming.

"Sure. He waited as long as he could, then he had to rush off to dress for a banquet. He put us both on a very good thing. We both took some."

"Took some what?" she asked quickly.

"We'll both make a dollar," her father said easily. "We took stock in Nixon's Chocolate Products. That's a big seller and it's going to—"

Noreen was flabbergasted.

"Father, you hush!" She turned to John. "Did he—did Mr. Markey remind you of someone you used to know when you drove horses?"

"Well, he was a bit on the order of Sonny Ogden, the boy race-track plunger."

Nora was so exasperated she could have jumped up and down. "John, John, I'm sorry for you—but Father here—he's been in business, and he should know better than to be swindled by a man like—like the count!"

John said quickly, "Oh, no, Miss Nora. John Markey is not like the count. The count could fool the women, but he never fooled the men!"

"All I can say is, the Marquis of Quicksilver is an improvement on him, for he fools everybody!"

"The marquis of what, now?"

But Nora had flung out, in tears. Now she had to admit to herself that she had been interested, more than interested; that she had been willing to give John Markey the benefit of doubts and suspicions because she liked him, couldn't help liking him. And he had failed all her hopes and expectations.

That night he telephoned. She hung up as soon as she recognized his voice. He telephoned three times on Sunday. She wouldn't answer, and her father had to say she was out.

She didn't see him come in on Monday, for he was at the office ahead of her. About eleven o'clock the man who had hired her came to her and introduced a quiet, confident little blonde girl. "She will take your place," he said. "Show her what you can about the desk, and then report to my office."

WHEN she came to him, he smiled at her. "We're surprised and delighted with you, Miss Hughes."

"Well, I'm glad if I've—"

"Exactly—Now we want your mind, your ideas, your reactions, for we know you are clever, and we have just the place for you. In two short weeks outside, you seem to have found yourself. Mind, I don't say that you lacked poise—but in this enterprise you must have something more. You must have force—and, by George, you certainly seem to have acquired it, for one of our brightest young men has put in a bid for your services as his secretary assistant, and while I had thought to let you go elsewhere, I'm going to defer to him. I'm sure you and Mr. Markey will make a great team."

"Mr. Markey?" she breathed.

"Yes—high-powered, and a very quick jumper, but he always lands right side up. Let's go see him."

He led her down a corridor lined with private offices and opened a door. "Here she is, Mr. Markey. She is going to help you and you are going to help her, in every way you can. Good luck to you both."

For a moment after the boss had gone, Noreen and John looked at each other. She was wearing, as it happened, the same blue dress in which he had first seen her—with tan collar and cuffs now, instead of white; and he was in the same dove-grey suit. He smiled and said, "That will be your desk, by the window, where the light is best."

She came out of her daze. "It will be nothing of the kind."

"What?"

"I am leaving."

He jumped up and stood against the door so she couldn't reach the knob. "Now just one moment—please, Noreen."

"I don't want to make a scene, but I shall not stay here. I am leaving your office, for I am leaving this company for good."

"Very well. Now, if you will just balance yourself, as your father says—"

She flared out at him, keeping her voice down. "You leave my father out of this. You had no right to go to my home and swindle my father and an old friend of ours!"

His face suddenly was serious. "Swindle them?"

"Yes—selling them—I can't even remember the name—"

He said, "You'll remember it all right! You'll hear and see it plenty. It might interest you to know that stock is worth much more right now than it was last week at closing time, and it's not yet noon. You just sit down and listen to me, young lady!"

Surprised, too surprised to protest when he took her arm and led her forcefully to a chair, she sat down. He said, "I wouldn't advise a friend, or an enemy, for that matter, to buy something unless I knew it to be good. I know all about Nixon's products. The lady you saw with the night I borrowed money from your brother-in-law, is Mrs. Nixon."

"Well—well, I mean—"

"Well, let me tell you, she is a very shrewd and a very delightful lady. I took her to that roof garden to hear that orchestra because her husband asked me to. He is going to sponsor a radio programme advertising his products, and we are handling it."

SHE looked at him frankly. "I must admit that I thought—"

"You didn't think. You just jumped at conclusions. All right, they call me a jumper, too, but I have to know where I'm jumping. Perhaps you relied on what women refer to as 'woman's intuition.' Well, men get intuition, too. A woman can be wrong in hers. Oftentimes she is, but it doesn't make any difference. But when a man is wrong in his, it's darned important, for it may mean he's sunk!"

Noreen Hughes wasn't displaying now any of the poise and force and competence she was supposed to have developed at the reception desk. She was looking very small and shy, if not scared. She said, timidly, "You don't have to be so angry about it, John."

"Oh, I don't, eh? So you jumped to another conclusion when you learned I had put your father and his friend on to a good thing—which I had no right to do, and which I did because I liked them both. Henry Nixon is going to spend millions in advertising—radio, and the works. That orchestra you heard will be on one of his programmes. I suppose you thought I was requesting tiddle-dee-dee music because I liked to hop around on a maple floor! Well, let me tell you—it was at Mrs. Nixon's request!"

"Oh, John—I'm sorry."

"Yes, but you're not half sorry enough. I was even short of cash that night, and had to get it from Walter Kevin. Hey—wait a minute! Wait a minute! Shall I show you Walter's letter acknowledging the return of the fifty dollars?"

"John Markey—don't be horrid!"

"But the thought that I was a dead-beat did creep into your mind, didn't it?"

"Darn you, John, of course it did! Only that day I had been told about a—well, a man who was always in a hurry, just as you're always in a hurry! So there!"

John ran a hand through his sandy hair, turned away, turned to her and grinned. "Hurry? If course I'm in a hurry. I always hurry. I hurried through Harvard, doing four years in two and a half, and building up a couple of thrifty little businesses to pay my way. Why wouldn't I hurry? Some people may be able to get to destinations without hurrying, but I can't."

"John, I'm sorry. I didn't understand."

"But you will. Now, why did I go to your father last Saturday? Because I knew it was time we got acquainted, for I have an idea he is going to see a lot of me, and we might as well get started!"

"Why, John Markey? If you're not—"

"Well, isn't he? Isn't he?"

"I—I don't know," she said faintly.

He pretended surprise. "You don't know? Why—you know very well he's going to see a lot of me, if he stays around home at all!"

"Why—I never heard anyone talk so!"

"No, but you will. Look here, why do you suppose I sat up nights composing wires to you while I was away? Answer me that! No, I'll answer—because I'm crazy about you! I know what's going to happen, sooner or later, and I don't know about you, but I want to hustle it along!"

Her face was crimson, but she had to look at him, for she was fascinated. The little voice was dining at her, "He is the one! He is the one!" and now she didn't even try to shout it down. It didn't even occur to her to marvel that all idea of a long and tender courtship could go forward and so quickly. But she had to say something. "Please stop, John. I'm supposed to be your assistant, and what way is this to start?"

"Just exactly the right way. See—first I do this—"

In a very small voice she said, "And all our lives you'll be in a hurry, rushing here and rushing there—"

He looked at her and said, very gently, "You'll never have reason to say that I rushed away from you, sweetheart—and even if these preliminaries seem in any way hurried, just bear in mind I'm never one to relax and loll upon my laurels. All my life I shall be my duty and the pleasure of my heart to pay court to you. Oh—damn!"

His telephone was ringing. He answered the call with, "Yes—yes, yes, the printer got it this morning. What? All right—I'll be right with you."

He slammed down the receiver, grabbed a folder of papers, pointed at her with a stiff forefinger and said softly, "Don't move. Don't ever change that lovely expression. I have to hurry, but I'll be right back, and I won't be at all fierce. I'll be so—"

SHE stood up, radiant, defiant. "One moment, Mr. Markey. Do I take it that you have proposed to me?"

"Oh, Noreen, darling, I have, I have! Will you marry me, aud—"

"Then, since you'll never have to propose to me again, don't you think—"

"I do, indeed!" He put his arms around her and she put her arms around him. They kissed. It was in every way a kiss suitable to the occasion.

Makes Rocks in Laboratory

SOME of the steps of earth's creation are being duplicated at the Geophysical Laboratory of the Carnegie Institution of Washington.

By reproducing temperature and pressures comparable to those which obtained in nature while the primary rocks were in process of formation, it has been possible to produce some of them synthetically.

The process was described by Dr. Norman L. Bowen, of the laboratory staff. He has been engaged upon this problem for many years. It concerns especially the origins of the so-called igneous rocks—the primary material of the planet.

Once the globe, Dr. Bowen explains, was a molten, liquid mass. Slowly it cooled and solidified. It emerged from the cooling period a ball of barren stone. From this everything else has been derived.

The "igneous rocks" resulting from the cooling, and from the subsequent cooling of molten lava in some places, underwent various metamorphoses. They were cut down by water and wind and sedimentation set in. The sediment upset! balances, was subjected to enormous pressures, and became the sedimentary or secondary rock within which is preserved the fossil record of the past.

Changed by Heat

FURTHERMORE, in the terrific stresses and strains which the planet's surface has undergone through the ages, both igneous and sedimentary rocks have been subjected to heats and pressures which completely changed their nature, resulting in still a third type—metamorphic rocks.

Said Mr. Bowen: "When igneous rocks, deep-seated or volcanic, are examined in detail they are found to exhibit a great diversity of physical, chemical and mineralogical characters. They have been classified into hundreds of different types as a result of a detailed study of their chemical and physical characters."

"The origin of this diversity is the fundamental problem. It is possible, of course, to assume that different rock types have come into being through special acts of creation or that they have always existed as distinct entities since the beginning of time. But petrological studies show that different rock types found in association with each

Poet and Nurse Among 200 to Share Will of Millionaire

(Copyright, 1935, by the North American Newspaper Alliance, Inc.)

A LONELY millionaire bachelor who had outlived most of his contemporaries and become just a dim figure to those in his native Massachusetts who still remembered him, died in Paris last month. When his will was filed in Worcester, Mass., it proved to be the longest and strangest document of the kind ever received in the Courthouse.

Two hundred individuals were on the old man's list.

To ambassadors and princes, from $2,000 to $10,000 apiece.

To an old woman, $10,000 because she had been "the oldest and best of friends." She had been his wet nurse and she died three years ago at the age of 103.

To an opera singer, $5,000; to an old gardener, $10,000.

To a poor, seventy-six-year-old English poet whom the literary world has all but forgotten, $5,000, which will bring brightness to his closing years.

Many of those named in the unique document died too soon to receive their legacies. A great many others were as surprised as anyone else. A Newburyport woman who received $1,500 never had seen the benefactor in her life; but she had once been kind to an old woman who was his friend.

The man who died was Albert H. Whitin, of Whitinsville and Paris. He went abroad in 1914 to stay six weeks, and stayed the rest of his life.

The will is 110 pages long, contains 220 clauses and provides for the disposal of an estate in excess of $1,750,000.

Liked His Verse

THE will is a revealing document. Mr. Whitin, one perceives, enjoyed friendships, valued service, and was fond of stained glass windows, pictures, poetry and choir singing.

Clause 26 of the will reads: "I give to Sir William Watson, Knt., of Hawkeshead, Ambleside, Westmoreland, Eng., if he is living at the date of my death, $5,000 as a token of mutual friendship and of my admiration of the poetic elevation of his verse."

Sir William is not dead. Dispatches say the gift comes to an old man who needs it. Another clause of the document leaves to Mrs. Catherine Foley Cullinan, of County Waterford, Ire., $2,500 "in remembrance of the long and faithful service of her grand-mother, Katherine Foley, in the family of the late James Fletcher Whitin," father of Mr. Whitin.

Sir Esme Howard, for six years British Ambassador to the United States, was named recipient of $10,000 "as a token of warm regard and every good wish for the welfare of his sons." The sum of $25,000, furthermore, has been left to be divided among Sir Esme's five sons.

Occasionally a friendly, temperate word of advice is thrown in along with a bequest. For instance, "I give to Capitano Cesare Fabozzi, now on duty at the War Office in Rome, Italy, the sum of $12,000 as a token of strong attachment, with the advice that he continue in military service until the age of retirement."

Dr. Alcock, of Salisbury, England, is to receive $500 "in token of my privilege of hearing the choir of Chapel Royal in St. James' Palace, which Dr. Alcock so eminently directed for a term of years."

By no means all of the bequests were made to titled or literary Europeans. To Sister Mary Magdalene, St. Joseph's Convent, Clonmel, County Tipperary, "for charity."

$10,000 for Gardener

WILLIAM Pittendreich, the gardener who tended the grounds of Mr. Whitin's old homestead, was named to receive $10,000 in token of his "long and efficient services and of my personal regard for him."

Pittendreich, however, preceded his employer to the grave by several years, and his wife and twin sons will benefit from the Whitin will.

Mrs. Mary P. Elliott, of Newburyport, never met Mr. Whitin, but she is to receive $1,500 by his will, "as a token of regard and of kind care of the late Mrs. Ruth A. Pike and of the latter's devoted friendship." Mrs. Pike's sister had married into the Whitin family, but it was with Mrs. Elliott that Mrs. Pike passed her declining years.

Miss Emma Avery, of Worcester, is to receive $1,000 because "of her mother's devoted care of my invalid brother while in London. Miss Edith Langridge is to receive $1,500 "in appreciation of most capable medical attention."

Mary Ann Quigley Brown, as a young immigrant from County Kerry, Ireland, became a nurse in the Whitin family. She died three years ago at the age of 103, but word of her passing apparently never reached Mr. Whitin in Paris. He left her $10,000, calling her "the oldest and best of friends."

The largest personal bequest was to Mrs. Mary Alice Whitin Larkin. Mr. Whitin willed that a $400,000 trust fund be set up for her, and that an additional $250,000 fund be set up if she should return from her present home in San Jacinto, Calif., to his old homestead in Northridge.

Mrs. Larkin, Mr. Whitin's favorite niece, married Charles Larkin, of the Buffalo, N.Y., soap manufacturing family.

The public bequests in Mr. Whitin's will are almost as revealing of his character as the private legacies.

The Boston Museum of Fine Arts is willed $30,000 to establish the Whitin Traveling Fellowship.

Suggest Travels

I SUGGEST that the student receiving this scholarship include in his trip a visit to York, Gouda, Liege, Paris, Chartres, Bourges, Sens, Auch, Assisi and Florence," wrote Whitin.

Students of fine arts will recognize these towns as centres of mediaeval and renaissance art, and particularly places where the finest stained glass windows in Europe are to be found.

He left other funds outright to a number of art galleries; but in the case of a $10,000 bequest to the National Gallery in Edinburgh, Scotland, he specifies that the income be used to purchase portraits, "preferably those of Queen Mary and other members of the Royal House of Stuart."

A grandson of Col. Paul Whitin, founder of the Whitin Machine Works and progenitor of the now large tribe of Whitins who still are successfully making mill machinery and operating mills in Worcester County, Albert Whitin received a substantial inheritance, which increased through careful investment. He showed no taste for public life, his artistic tastes and his fondness for travel.

KING GEORGE'S TREASURES

By ARTHUR BRAYBROOKE

THE passage of the centuries has seen the gradual accumulation of a collection of jewels, of objects gold and silver in the Tower of London. Probably few monarchs have been adorned with so much wealth as Their Majesties King George and Queen Mary, who this year celebrate the jubilee of their accession.

The regalia, as all these treasures are collectively known, has been lodged for centuries in the Tower to ensure its safe custody, but there was a time when it was not all kept together, a circumstance which led to an irreparable loss during the troublous times of King Charles I.

Within the sacred precincts of Westminster Abbey, for which Edward the Confessor did so much, there reposed his crown, known as the Crown of St. Edward. This priceless historical relic was broken up and sold during the Civil War.

The imperial crown used for the coronation of English kings is still known as St. Edward's Crown. It was made for Charles II, at the Restoration, to replace the one which had come to so untimely an end. It contains rubies, diamonds, pearls, emeralds and sapphires. On top there is a mound of gold. The gold fillet is set with stones, including three large oval pearls. The crown is formed of four crosses and four fleurs-de-lis of gold, rising from the rim. The inside, which protects the wearer's head from the metal, is of purple velvet lined with taffeta and turned up with ermine.

Housed in Tower

THOUGH the jewels have, from remote times, been kept at the Tower, they have had several moves. The treasury at the Temple, that at Westminster, and other religious houses, have been used for their custody. They were first kept in a small building, on the south side of the White Tower, then they were removed during the stormy reign of Charles I to stronger quarters in the Martin Tower, which subsequently came to be known as the Jewel Tower. There they remained until the fire of 1841 damaged the building, when they were, for immediate safety, lodged in the Governor's House. Later the same year the new Jewel House was opened.

Queen Victoria had to have a special crown made, which was done by Russell & Bridge in 1838, using stones from older crowns and other jewels supplied to the Queen's instructions. When completed it weighed just over thirty-nine ounces, no inconsiderable burden for the head of a girl of nineteen.

It contained numerous precious stones, the chief being a partly-drilled sapphire purchased for the crown of George IV, and set in the front of Queen Victoria's, and the famous ruby said to have been given to Edward, the Black Prince, by Don Pedro, King of Castile, after the Battle of Najera in 1367.

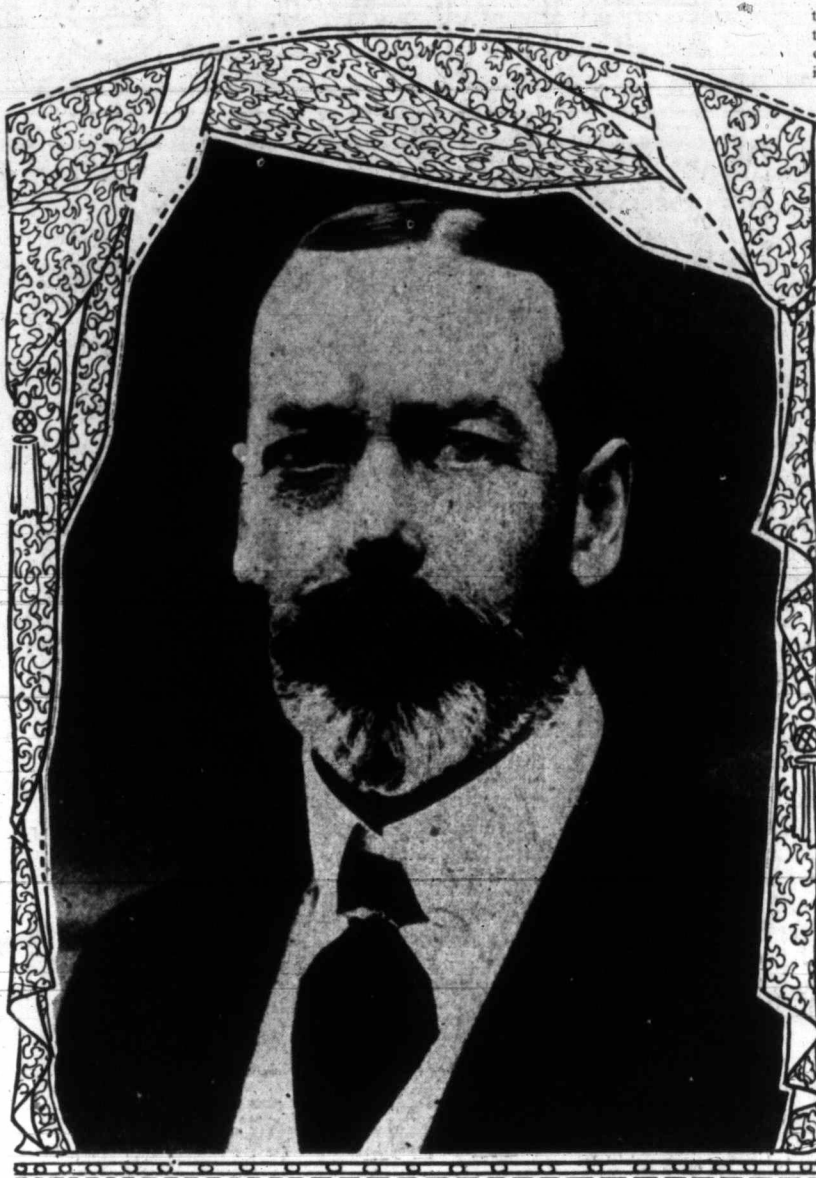

This ruby was subsequently worn by Henry V in his helmet at the Battle of Agincourt in 1415. According to the Oriental custom the stone is pierced, and a smaller ruby set in the piercing.

Queen Victoria's Crown

A ROUND this ruby in Queen Victoria's crown were seventy-five brilliant diamonds, forming the cross.

Compared with this, the Prince of Wales' Crown of pure gold is a relatively simple affair.

The ancient Queen's Crown, of gold, is set with very valuable diamonds and other precious stones, and is used at coronations for crowning the Queen Consort. There is also a Queen's Diadem, which Mary of Modena, wife of James II, wore. It is very richly studded with stones and was valued by Sandford at £11,000.

Then there is the Orb, an ornamental ball of gold, which the Sovereign carries. The companion piece to this is the sceptre, which the King holds in his other hand on state occasions. At his coronation he carries the Orb in his right hand, and on returning to Westminster Hall in his left.

The Jewel House contains more than one sceptre. First there is the Sceptre Royal, surmounted by a cross, and two feet nine inches in length. The Archbishop of Canterbury places this in the King's hand during the coronation. The Sceptre with Dove bears a small cross and a winged dove, symbolic of mercy. St. Edward's Staff, which is also a sceptre of gold, is carried before the Sovereign at the coronation ceremony.

The Queen also bears a Sceptre with Cross. There is also a Queen's Ivory Rod, believed to have been carried by Mary of Modena, wife of James II. Nor must we omit to mention the second Sceptre with Dove which was discovered in 1814 behind the paneling. It is believed to have been made for Queen Mary II, who reigned in her own right jointly with William III.

Crown Was Borrowed

HAYDON, the artist, tells a curious story about that crown of George IV which has already been mentioned. He says that it was "not bought, but borrowed. Rundell's price was £70,000, and Lord Liverpool told the King he could not sanction such an expenditure. Rundell charged £7,000 for the loan, and as some time elapsed before it was decided whether the crown should be bought or not Rundell charged £3,000 or £4,000 more for the interval."

Despite their priceless value, the Crown Jewels have been on exhibition continuously since the Restoration, with only one attempt made to steal them. The desperado who was responsible for this bore the appropriate name of Blood. Under the Commonwealth he was a subaltern officer, but he made himself "useful" to Charles II and was promoted to the rank of colonel. Among his other adventures was a plan to seize Dublin Castle and kill the Lord-Lieutenant, and an attempt to hang the Duke of Ormond at Tyburn, which almost succeeded.

To the Tower of London he came, disguised as a country clergyman, with a woman purporting to be his wife. She did her part and was apparently taken ill. She was taken to the private suite of the Deputy-Keeper of the Crown Jewels, an octogenarian named Talbot Edwards. Colonel Blood saw how ill-defended the place was, and in an instant had formed his plan.

Four days later, out of gratitude for the care shown to his "wife" when she fainted in the Jewel House, he came with a pair of gloves as a present for Mrs. Edwards. He thus cultivated their acquaintance and arranged a marriage between her daughter and his nephew. They fixed an appointment for him to bring the bridegroom to be introduced, and all was ready.

Bolted With Crown

BLOOD and four others rode up, leaving one to hold the horses. The three remaining and Blood himself were to carry off the globe, sceptre and crown. Each was armed with sword stick, dagger and two pistols. While pretending to await his wife, Blood suggested that his friends might be shown the Crown Jewels. The moment the door was locked on the inside, in accordance with custom, two seized Talbot Edwards, choked him into silence and knocked him unconscious. All would have gone according to plan but for an utterly unforeseen circumstance. The son of Talbot Edwards, returned from Flanders, ran upstairs to greet his family. Colonel Blood and an old Cromwellian trooper, named Parrot, bolted with the globe and crown. The sceptre would not break and so had to be left.

The old man slipped his gag and raised the alarm. Blood tried to shoot his way out but was overpowered. Hunt's horse threw him, otherwise he would have been the only one of the party to escape.

The sequel is more amazing even than the daring raid. All the criminals were released. Colonel Blood was received at Court, and obtained a Government appointment with unspecified duties at a salary of £500 a year! This part of the story has never been thoroughly explained, but it is not difficult to guess at what happened. Charles II needed money; his Parliaments were not too generous in granting it. If the Crown Jewels conveniently disappeared nobody would have been robbed, and they really belonged to the King, anyway. That, probably, is the nearest explanation we shall ever find of Col. Blood's reception at Court.

Since then the Crown Jewels have rested undisturbed by thieves, though millions of people must have passed through the Jewel House to gaze at the King's treasures.

place mining has languished for lack of outstanding successes, but a small body of men, unquenchably fired by faith and hope, has been battling constantly against overwhelming odds to wrest the riches held by the gravels. Dredging has never brought real success to those who have attempted that form of mining. Hydraulic has been fraught with difficulties that have made such operations only partially successful. Hand methods have brought success to some operators on a small scale, but the treasure is too deeply buried by running water or overburden for recovery by primitive means.

Now is coming the "deep lead" system. Lack of funds will not be a difficulty in the way of success. The Australian method is to be given a thorough trial, under expert technical supervision. Already it is launched to an excellent start under highly favorable and most encouraging circumstances. Mining men are watching the operations with great interest and whether confident of success or skeptical, they are hoping the Lightning Creek operations will lead to the re-birth of the Cariboo placers, as did the Cariboo Gold Quartz Mine to re-birth of gold production from that romantic and rich mineral field. There can be little question that at the first signs of profitable recovery by the Australian system, that method will be employed to wrest the gold from the many other ancient gravel beds of the district that are known to be rich.

Bans Abbreviations

AN edict forbidding the use of portmanteau words for the full terminology of official institutions has been issued by the German Minister of Labor. No longer may "Alu" be substituted for "Arbeitslosenunterstützung," which is the German equivalent of "dole." "Mula," which replaced a twenty-four-letter word, and "Trupka" one of eighteen, both referring to official pensions lists, may not be used in future.

Boy King Is Worrying

KING Ananda Mahidol, Siam's nine-year-old ruler, is already worried about falling from his throne.

When the official Siamese delegation conveyed to him the nation's respects, he remarked: "The throne looks very high. Are you sure I won't fall off it on to the Prime Minister?"

He also asked assurances that there would not be too much work for him if he goes to Siam.

King Ananda came to Caux to escape the publicity which followed his selection as the new king of Siam. He skates every day with his mother and regrets that he may have to go to Siam where there are no ice rinks.

Preserved Their Faith

IT was the success of the lode development that gave the Cariboo its re-birth as an important gold field. Through the years working days. If the values in the gravels average 20 dwts. per square fathom, the gross profit per year is estimated at $75,000.

May Develop Lodes

WHILE the Lightning Creek operations are primarily for the recovery of placer gold, the nature of the development will be such that there will be a possibility of lode mining following the completion of placer mining. In the drives through the reefs it is quite possible that auriferous veins may be discovered and these may carry values of commercial importance. Already bedrock samples show sporadic veins of quartz and have tested up to $8 per ton. In the sinking of the Melvin shaft a vein system was discovered that widened out to twelve feet. Although no payable assays have been returned, the system is well mineralized and carries appreciable values in gold, silver and copper. This vein system may improve with depth.

Commenting on the lode possibilities, Mr. Mackenzie, who has had extensive experience in Australia, says: "The deep seated rock drives which are necessary in the Australian method of working the main 'gutter' will be invaluable in the location of auriferous veins at depth, particularly those vein systems that do not crop out on the surface."

Australia's Experience

IN Australia there are many examples of deep alluvial mines continuing as quartz mines, after the "gravels" had been exhausted. One that came under my own inspection was 'The Great Southern Alluvial Mine,' which worked for many years as a profit-making quartz lode mine after the gravels had been worked out. Another typical example was 'The Great Western Leads' at Ballarat, where the quartz and the alluvial were working simultaneously.

"Up to 1926, over $50,000,000 were won from the reefs of Ballarat, Australia, after the associated alluvial had been worked out."

"Having examined both the Ballarat and Cariboo gold fields, I feel constrained to state that what happened in the former fields has a reasonably good chance of being repeated in the Cariboo."

Mr. Mackenzie has embarked on a tremendously big undertaking at Lightning Creek. Sent out last July by British shareholders as consulting engineer to examine the property and make recommendations, he wasted no time before starting complete reorganization of existing operations. Being a man of direct and forceful action, of an engaging personality and of determined character, it was not long before his critical and systematic examination of the entire situation bore fruit in the nature of a complete

Means Much to B.C.

As a result he became general manager and technical adviser. He canceled other contracts and decided to remain at the mine until the property reaches the stage of profitable production. Backed by adequate funds, he is in a position to push development as progress warrants. Unless he is wrong in his decisions and expectations, which is unlikely in view of his wide experience and his enviable record as a successful mining engineer, the Lightning Creek development will mean much to British Columbia's mining industry.

It is seventy-five years since men flocked by the thousands to wrest the golden riches from the streams and creeks of the Cariboo. When the early rush was over, millions of dollars in gold had been taken from the gravels of Williams, Keithly, Lightning, Antler and other creek beds in the district. As the readily obtainable gold supply began to diminish the digging subsided until only a few remained, many of them Chinese, to "toil and moil" for the gold, satisfied with making a living but eternally hoping to make a rich strike.

Vast Resources

NO one thought for a moment that the gold was all gone, and no one thinks that yet. Geologists and mining engineers by the score have recorded their belief that there are hundreds of millions in gold to be won from the Cariboo, not in small dribbles but in huge quantities. Only the exact location of the treasure remains to be determined, and even that is fairly definite. For decades man has been taxing his ingenuity to devise means of overcoming the difficulties placed in the way by Nature in her determination that her rewards shall be fairly won.

From the days of the first gold rush it has been known that the hills and mountains of the Cariboo, as well as the streams, were potential sources of the elusive yellow metal. One difficulty after another presented themselves to defeat those who sought to take the gold from the hills, but man's ingenuity prevailed and today there are two profitable lode mines in the district, and several other developmental operations are giving distinct indications of becoming profitable producers in due course.

Books of the Year

By MARION ISABEL ANOUS

"The Sun Will Shine" (Collins), by May Edginton.

A very charming love story is told against a typical English background. The plot is by no means new—the Cinderella who marries her rich employer for some reason of convenience, only to fall in love with him, which naturally complicates the situation—but there are some unusual angles to this book which will appeal to those who like their reading light and sentimental.

Sonia May, only daughter of two unworried people who had managed to remain lovers through years of marriage and poverty, decides that something should be done about their precarious financial situation. She applies for a position as secretary to a man who wants to write a book about his ancestral home before he dies. This, it develops, is a secret from all his friends except his cousin and heir, but the doctor has told Sir Hugo Dereham that he has very few months to live.

Sonia's duties are many. Not only is she supposed to be the competent and unobtrusive secretary, but she also has to act as hostess when Sir Hugo's acquaintances incense Ramonde Allett, who has been angling for Sir Hugo for some months, but pleases Francis Selwyn, who does not appreciate the idea of his cousin marrying and leaving a posthumous heir. And, naturally, human nature being what it is, the relations between Sonia and Sir Hugo arouse first speculation, then malicious gossip.

More for his own sake than Sonia's, Sir Hugo asks the girl to marry him and on his explaining the need for urgency, she consents. She refuses any elaborate marriage settlement and they are quietly married. The consternation of Ramonde, the reactions of Sonia's parents and Francis, and the inevitable complications that arise when a pretty girl and a handsome man are thrown into a situation of intimacy are told with skill and drama. A satisfying conclusion will appeal to the avid sentimentalist.

"Sweet Danger" (Doubleday, Doran & Co.), by Maymie Greig.

Loyalty to an ideal and love often confuse a right-minded person, as Jan Jerrold found when she accepted the post of social secretary to Nona Larson, who had married Philip with whom Jan had been in love since childhood.

Jan and Philip, both orphans, had been brought up by Dr. Ripley, and the bond between them was very deep. So deep was it that Jan had been bewildered and hurt by Philip's unexpected marriage and almost total disappearance from her life. Not even the death of Dr. Ripley had been able to bring him back, so she was very surprised when she was asked to come to Ottersham Park. Because she wanted to see Philip so much, Jan accepted, and on the train met Peter Wentworth, who hinted at strange things. Philip, he said boldly, was a neurotic, and not worthy of Nona. Nona was a creature apart whom he himself loved.

On their arrival, Jan found Nona a delightful person but Philip very much changed. She couldn't quite put a name to the trouble, although it was evident that Philip was a victim of uncontrollable jealousy, frustration and loneliness. She realized that her own love for Philip was inflamed by his presence and his unhappiness, and she decided to leave. Nona, however, enlisted her aid by suggesting her very real fear of Philip's almost insane passion and of his determination to take her up in his new airplane. Nona felt that Philip was capable of taking her up and not bringing her down.

Jan scouted this idea, but stayed. The longer she was at Ottersham the more puzzled she became. Philip was himself, and yet not himself. A crisis was precipitated when the new airplane arrived and Philip insisted on Nona christening the plane and accompanying him on his first flight. Peter tried to interfere, but Laddie, Nona's brother, supported Philip and the flight was made. Just as Philip landed on the return, the plane capsized. Philip was seriously hurt, but Nona escaped unhurt.

That night Nona clonched with Peter, and on Philip's regaining consciousness, Jan and Laddie told him Nona had died.

From here the story moves swiftly, interestingly and consistently from one dramatic situation to another until the final terrible and inevitable climax. The story powerfully portrays the havoc one person may wreak upon a number of closely associated lives and suggests the tragedies that emanate from the dark recesses of a mentally distraught person's mind.

Strange Lights in Sea Are Now Explained

DOWN in the depths of the sea there is an unearthly blue light. But one is conscious only of the strange light itself. Nothing can be seen with it, William Beebe, the naturalist, reports this light as far down as 1,900 feet in accounts of his deep-sea explorations. At 2,000 feet there is no sensation of light at all. One is in perpetual darkness.

What is the nature of this transition from ever-weakening light to vivid light in a zone of utter darkness which does not enable one to see anything? Dr. E. O. Hulburt, of the Naval Research Laboratory in Washington, offers an explanation of the phenomena.

First, he points out, with increasing depth the water cuts out band after band of the visible spectrum. The last to go is the violet, after which the only light getting through is the ultra-violet, which is invisible. But, laboratory experiments show, this ultra-violet light striking the eye produces a fluorescence of blue light. It is the same phenomenon as occurs when rocks are irradiated with ultra-violet light. They proceed to emit lights of their own and change color accordingly. Whites become pinks and browns vivid reds. So specific is the reaction that it can be used in rough chemical analysis.

The human eye acts just as do the rocks. But one sees an object by the light reflected from it. The only light reflected from objects in the great depths is the ultra-violet, to which the human retina is insensitive. Consequently nothing can be seen. But one is sensitive to light fluorescence, in this case blue, which is coming from the eye itself.

The Night Before the Show

IT was exciting for Renee to be staying at Byway, the very night before the great dog show at Bournemouth to which her Aunt Jill was taking Dauntless, the beautiful red setter that had already won a prize at the Crystal Palace.

It was dark, and a light rain was falling. Dauntless had already been partially got ready for the competition next day, had been combed and brushed; and now Renee was in sole charge of him while her aunt was out seeing a friend who was going to call for them early next day and take all three to the show.

Dauntless was very much devoted to his brother Jack. Together the dogs lay by the log fire and Renee talked to them. She always called Dauntless Dare, for short.

"Good Dare! Noble fellow! You're going to win; I know you are. And Jack will be just longing to hear if you get a first, won't you, poor plain Jack, who can't go to the show because he isn't good-looking enough."

In the midst of all this a knock was heard. It was the farmer who brought the milk every evening.

Renee liked Mr. Giles, and stayed to have a talk with him just for a minute about the weather they were going to have the next day.

A rush, a swift, golden form flashing past, and oh, what disaster!

Dauntless, whom she was so anxiously guarding, had dashed, out of sheer mischief and longing for exercise, into the night.

It was pitch dark, and the wood stood vast and mysterious only just outside the garden wall. Renee became frantic with fear.

Rushing into the garden, she called and called, and the farmer went along the path shouting. Oh, if Dauntless had gone off hunting he would be away for days and the dog show would pass and they would have to miss it.

There was no reply. Renee prayed that Aunt Jill would not come back just yet.

"Dare, Dare, Dare!", she called.

Silently Jack's great body slipped out of the house.

"Fetch your brother, darling!" Renee called to him.

But now both dogs were lost, swallowed up in the great black night.

By and by Aunt Jill came home, and they had a very silent supper indeed. Poor Renee felt terribly sorry for her great carelessness because, after all, she had been left in charge.

"Well, it can't be helped," said Aunt Jill when the clock struck ten. "You really must go to bed, Renee. And (noticing the little girl's downcast face) don't worry too much. We all forget to be careful sometimes."

"You'll never ask me down here for my holiday again!" Renee cried, breaking down. "Never again let me look after the red setters."

"I shall," said Aunt Jill earnestly. "It's forgiven."

"But I don't forgive myself," said Renee obstinately, and ran upstairs to hide her tears.

In the night she woke.

A moon was up now, and from her open window she could see into the wood. And there, quite near to her, she saw the noble hounds. They were lying by an oak tree, their paws silvered by moonlight, in slumber.

It was too good to be true! She bounded from bed, and called their names by the open casement:

"Dare, Dare! Jack! Dear Dare, come!"

Aunt Jill heard it in the midst of her dream. She leaped out of bed, and came into her niece's room.

"Darling, don't; it's no use," she said.

But Renee, her face aglow, only smiled and beckoned. And called again, sharply: "Home, Dare!"

"Here they come," said she.

And it was true. The two noble brothers had heard; and, their mad fit over, were walking toward the front door. Long before they reached it it stood open.

Please, Dobbin, Don't Sit Down Like That

"Gee-up! the little Puppies cry to Elder Brother John, Please, Dobbin, don't sit down like that! Get up and canter on."

We want to drive you round the house and through the kitchen door, And in and out the furniture upon the parlor floor."

"Well, wait a bit," laughs Brother John, "and then I'll do my best. But now I am a weary horse that has to have a rest."

Crossing the Street

WE are soon to have automatic signals where there is the greatest traffic. These will cost a great deal of money, but it is hoped fewer people will be killed or hurt by motor cars.

In many parts of the city and on country roads no such precautions can be taken. Boys and girls, as well as older people, must look out for themselves or accidents will happen, no matter how careful drivers are.

In England, the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Education together have agreed to teach the children of the country to avoid danger. This is part of what they have published. Read it carefully, then cut it out and show it to your friends.

"The man or woman whose car injures a child is not always to blame for an accident."

"We should give ourselves time and not dash across; a new situation may develop any moment (a car may skid or a horse may turn or we may slip), and we should give ourselves time for surprises. We should remember that all the people on the roads are doing their best, and should not add to their difficulties. If we have young people or old people we should guide them."

"Remember that the most dangerous places are the corners, where anything may be coming along four ways. Another great danger is in getting out of vehicles. Never step off a vehicle till it is stopped, and look carefully where you go. Never get out of a car on the traffic side. Never run across behind a standing vehicle or a slow one; something fast may be coming that you cannot see. Never hang on to a vehicle, and never run out of a gateway into the road."

"Remember that always you are safe if you will take your time and look where you go. It is carelessness that makes the danger."

On the Quay

I've never traveled for more'n a day,

I never was one to roam

But I likes to sit on the busy quay

Watchin' the ships that says to me

"Always somebody's goin' away,

Somebody gettin' home."

I likes to think the world's so wide—

'Tis grand to be livin' there,

Takin' a part in its goin's on

Ah, now ye're laughin' at poor old John,

Talkin' o' works o' the world wif pride,

As if he was doin' his share!

But laugh if ye will! When ye're old as me

Ye'll find it a rare good plan

To look at the world—an' love it too!

Oh! 'tisn't all sorrow and pain to see

The work o' another man.

'Tis good when the heart grows big at last,

Too big for trouble to fill,

Wif room for things that was only stuff

When workin' and winnin' seemed more'n enough—

Room for the world, the world so vast,

Wif its peoples an' all their skill.

That's what I'm thinkin' on all the days

I'm loavin' and smokin' here,

An' the ships do make one think the most (Of readin' in books 'tis little I'd boast),

But the ships, they carries me long, long ways,

An' draws far places near.

I sees the things that the sailor brings,

I hears the stories he tells

'Tis surely a wonderful world indeed!

'Tis more'n the peoples can ever need!

An' I praises the Lord—to myself I sings—

For the world in which I dwells.

An' I loves the ships more every day,

Tho' I never was one to roam.

Oh! the ships is comfortin' sights to see,

An' they means a lot when they says to me

"Always somebody's goin' away,

Somebody gettin' home."

Badly Mixed

A shopkeeper bought 570 plant bulbs. There were two varieties, one of which cost him sixteen for a shilling and the other eighteen for a shilling.

The bulbs were delivered in two separate boxes, one for each variety, but in putting the boxes on a shelf he upset the whole lot on the floor.

To have sorted them out into two lots again would have been a very difficult task, so the shopkeeper sold them in mixed lots at fifteen for a shilling, making a profit of three shillings.

How many were there of each of the two kinds?

A Very Generous Manufacturer

COLMAN'S mustard is used in many households in all parts of the world. The sale of the famous condiment has made a great fortune, perhaps more than one.

A short time ago the head of the firm, Sir Jeremiah Colman, and his wife celebrated their golden wedding by giving away large sums of money. It is learned from The Children's Newspaper that:

"Sir Jeremiah Colman is a vice-president of the Boy Scouts, while Lady Colman is president of the Reigate Girl Guides, so that it is not surprising to learn that two of their biggest gifts were to the Scouts and Guides. Then one hospital has received a portable X-ray appliance and others sums of money; the Order of St. John of Jerusalem is richer by a motor ambulance and the Salvation Army by £500; and the Royal Horticultural Society has £1,000 to spend on improving flowers and fruit."

"St. John's College, Cambridge, is to have a squash racquet court, and the staff of the famous mustard firm, J. & J. Colman, has shared £1,000."

It is pleasant to think of the generosity and thoughtfulness of these old people.

Be Kind

THE season has come when we are all asked to help animals in distress. There are still drivers who would overload or neglect their horses but for the fear of punishment.

Thoughtless children frighten mother birds and naughty boys rob their nests. But the chief offenders against the law of kindness are those people who go out to the country or seaside and leave cats in deserted homes. Not much better are they who take their pets with them and then leave them to go wild in the fields and woods.

Dogs, too, are neglected, and there are other breaches of the law of kindness that children know of. Deliberate cruelty is rare among children and their elders, thanks in large measure to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. The society is appealing for funds and for members. All who can should contribute of their means or their time and energy.

Children who have pets can do their part by caring for them and seeing that, if they can prevent it, they do not annoy their neighbors. No one would willingly deprive a child of the delight and companionship of a puppy or a kitten.

In many gardens a pan of water is placed for the birds. That is a sign of kindness and brings the giver a reward in more than one way. Every little helps, and even children can give small sums to save animals pain.

He prayeth best who loveth best
All things both great and small;
For the dear God, who loveth us,
He made and loveth all.

The Wayside Flower

Pluck not the wayside flower,
It is the traveler's dower;
A thousand passers-by
Its beauties may espy,
May win a touch of blessing
From Nature's mild caressing.
The sad of heart perceives
A violet under leaves
Like some fresh-budding hope;
The primrose on the slope
A spot of sunshine dwells.
And cheerful message tells Of kind renewing power:
The nodding bluebell's dye
Is drawn from happy sky.
Then spare the wayside flower!
It is the traveler's dower.

The Camel's Hump

The camel's hump is an ugly hump.

Which well you may see at the zoo.

But uglier yet is the hump we get

From having too little to do.

Kiddies and grown-ups too—oo-oo,

If we haven't enough to do—oo-oo,

We get the hump—

Cameleous hump—

The hump that is black and blue!

We climb out of bed with a frouzy head

And a snarly-yarly voice;

We shiver and scowl and we grunt and we growl

At our bath and our toys;

And there ought to be a corner for me

(And I know there is one for you)

When we get the hump—

Cameleous hump—

The hump that is black and blue;

The cure for this ill is not to sit still,

Or frowst with a book by the fire;

But to take a large hoe and a shovel also,

And dig till you gently perspire;

And then you will find that the sun and the wind

And the Djinn of the Garden, too,

Have lifted the hump—

The horrible hump—

The hump that is black and blue!

Get it as well as you—oo-oo.

If I haven't enough to do—oo-oo.

We all get the hump—

Cameleous hump—

Kiddies and grown-ups too.

Only a Cat

Dedicated to Animal Welfare Week

"The golden rule applies to our conduct towards animals, as well as towards men."

Lo! the last living link is now severed,

With never a vestige of greeting,

Nor of welcome awaiting, a trace.

How quiet the house, and how lonely!

How peaceful the spot where he lies

'Neath the glittering stars, in the garden,

The lovelight now quenched in his eyes.

A faithful companion, patrician,

Courageous beyond all compute

Was Bundi, the prince of all Persians.

His musical murmur now mute,

Though his eyes were of luminous amber,

As every Chinchilla's should be,

Yet oft on occasion, like emeralds

Deep hidden, they mystified me.

How lustrous his coat, and how lordly!

His plume with its eloquent curve!

What, "only a cat?" Well, I loved him

As only the helpless deserve.

No welcome now waits at the threshold,

No soft little murmur of cheer;

That last living link, just a memory,

Of days dead and gone that were dear.

L'envoi.

Ave, scott if needs must—who but stoics?

I grieve, but why cavil at that,

When birds long since wept with emotion,

"On the death of a favorite cat?"

MARY H. RATHOM.

Victoria, B.C., April 10, 1935.

"The heart is hard in nature and unfit

For human fellowship, as being void

Of sympathy, and therefore dead alike

To love and friendship both, that is not pleased

With sight of animals enjoying life.

Nor feels their happiness augment his own."

—Cowper.

A Crest for a Crown

LONG, long ago, says an old legend, King Solomon made a journey to Persia. There was not a cloud in the brilliant, blue sky.

"The Sun is like a fiery ball. Can nothing protect me from its rays?" said Solomon.

At that moment a flight of vultures passed overhead, flying in the opposite direction to that in which the king was traveling.

"Stop those birds," commanded Solomon. "Order them to turn and fly along ahead of me, and so protect me from the Sun."

The attendant hastened to do his bidding. Presently he returned, very downcast. "The vultures refused to change their course," he said.

King Solomon frowned angrily.

"How dare they!" he cried. "Let them go with bald heads for the rest of their lives!"

The great king and his men rode on. All around stretched the rocky, dusty plains. Occasionally a fox slunk by, a peacock darted past. There were not many travelers on the road. A fourgon (a big four-wheeled cart drawn by horses) passed them on their way. A caravan of camels, one by one, with loping gait, stepped solemnly along.

There was a whirring of little wings; a flight of hoopeses swept by, going in the same direction as the vultures.

"Stop those birds!" said the king. "Tell them to turn and fly ahead of me, to protect me from the Sun, until I reach the hills."

Now the hoopeses were very kind-hearted. They listened attentively to the king's demands.

"Certainly," they said. "We have plenty of time to spare."

Thereupon they wheeled round and flew before him, acting as a little, brown cloud between him and the Sun's hot rays.

On, on, the company went until, at last, in the far distance, the snow mountains came in sight.

For a while the company halted at a caravanserai. The hoopeses halted too. Solomon and his men dismounted. A fakir, clad in a long cloak, ran up to them, holding out his begging bowl, which was cut out of a coconut. Brushing him aside, they pressed through the gates into a silent courtyard surrounded by a wall, against which were built the apartments for the travelers, animals and carts. There they spent the night.

At dawn once again the hoopeses, King Solomon and his men continued their journey to the hills. The snows glowed red in the distance, shading gradually to the deep blue of the nearer mountains.

At last the end of the journey was reached. The company halted before a white, flat-roofed house surrounded by peach trees.

Solomon prepared to take his siesta on the roof. He lay there, drinking in the diamond air of the hills, lazily eating a peach.

"Call the hoopeses," he said.

With a whirring of wings the little striped hoos swept down.

"My friends," said the king, "I thank you for your kindness. What reward would you have?"

The hoopeses considered carefully; at last they said: "Give us golden crowns like yours."

"That is a very foolish choice," said Solomon. "I find mine often very tiring. You will soon be asking me to take them away."

"No, no," said the birds.

"Very well," said Solomon. "Your wish is granted."

Away flew the birds in twittering, joyous hosts; golden crowns gleaming on their little heads.

A year passed. A message came to the king. "The hoopeses were very weary with the weight of their crowns. Would Solomon be kind enough to cause them to be taken away?"

"I thought I should have that request," said Solomon

AGRICULTURE IS A FIRST PRINCIPLE: ON IT RESTS THE LIFE AND HAPPINESS OF MANKIND—Julian A. Dimock

Late Sowing of Sweet Peas

HORTICULTURAL work must always be governed to a certain extent by precedent. Nevertheless, it is a grave mistake to adhere slavishly to certain methods of procedure and a rigidly-set calendar, for no other reason than the fact that they have been followed out successfully in former years. Sweet peas provide a case in point. Exhibition growers seldom depart from the accepted routine of sowing in Autumn, or, alternatively, in gentle heat in January, and even if the seed is sown outdoors where the plants are to bloom, most people are imbued with the idea that the one great aim is to get it in the ground as early as possible. There can be no feasible argument against any of these methods in so far as the production of early flowers is concerned, but the great majority of amateurs are apt to ignore the fact that in normal years the blooming season of plants which are grown to flower as early as possible is usually curtailed by hot, dry weather in midsummer. A week or two of baking sunshine, which hardens the tissues of the haulm, will soon shorten the flower stems, and, though the plants can be induced to struggle on, they cannot by any stretch of imagination be considered satisfactory.

Escaping the Heat

THE wisdom of making a late sowing which will not commence to flower until July or August, is, therefore, evident. So long as free growth is maintained by watering and syringing overhead, young plants will not suffer to anything like the same extent from scorching heat, and the cooler conditions which will prevail by the time they commence to bloom will prolong their usefulness until well on into the Autumn.

It is naturally foolish to contemplate making a late sowing in pots or boxes. To do so simply means that the plants will suffer a check when they are moved to their flowering quarters. Sown in the open ground, they have the chance to make steady, uninterrupted progress from the moment they start to grow. It is, indeed, the contention of many noted growers that, were it possible to have the plants in bloom early enough in the season, the very finest spikes would always be cut from plants raised from seed sown in the open ground.

Drought while the plants are still tiny will, of course, entail some labor in watering, for they must not be allowed to suffer from lack of moisture at the roots before they have had a chance to delve deeply into the soil. After they have obtained a good hold, dry weather is not attended with the same risk, but, wherever possible, the plants should be sprayed overhead during the cool of the evening. Nothing is more effective in keeping their growth soft and free. Any attempt at premature flowering must be nipped in the bud by cutting out the spikes while they are still quite tiny.

Effect on Coloring

IT would be erroneous to claim that some varieties give better results from a late sowing than others. From the point of view of vigor and freedom of growth, most will behave in exactly the same manner as earlier in the season. One point which can be taken advantage of, however, is that many of the most delightful salmon and orange shades will develop a depth and richness of coloring they can never attain during the Summer months. This is a direct result of the cooler weather, and the consequent slower development of the buds. The true burning oranges will still require protection from direct sunshine, but all those varieties with which Summer shading is merely a help and not a necessity, will be the better for full exposure to the more temperate sunshine.

Research Findings and Adaptation to Actual Growing Conditions

SCIENTIFIC research in Canada could accomplish in a comparatively few years what has taken centuries in older countries, but only if the significance of specific and detailed knowledge in agricultural progress is recognized. Unless research findings are related to actual growing conditions under which the farmer operates and are interpreted in terms of practical farm procedure, research cannot replace individual experiment. And in the final analysis, the value of land utilization studies in Canada must be gauged by their capacity to reduce the necessity for the wasteful repetition of individual experiment.

The dominant factor in agricultural progress in older countries has been the accumulated experience of operating farmers gained through centuries of trial and error. For instance, during the Roman occupation, all available arable land in England was devoted to wheat growing to feed the Roman armies in Gaul. Later, a withdrawal of this market caused a reversion to more self-sufficing farming and a great decrease in cultivated acreage.

Turn to Specialization

BY the middle of the fourteenth century this mode of farming was again giving way, under the pressure of local competition, to specialization and the distribution of crops according to natural adaptability.

From the Roman occupation to the Great War, England had increased cultivated acreage when war or other economic disturbances had created unusual demand or prices, and subsequently returned millions of acres to grass or rough pasture; and it is significant that by the middle of the nineteenth century, before agricultural research, as now understood, had any appreciable influence on the rank and file of British farmers, this accumulated experience had developed remarkably efficient and flexible land utilization policies. The appliance of scientific findings when they became available resulted in an era of unprecedented agricultural progress.

Two Common Errors in Regard to Feeding and Care of Rabbits

By E. M. STRAIGHT

Supt. Dominion Experimental Station, Eganston

THERE are two popular errors with regard to rabbits, one, that they do not require drinking water, and two, that little care is necessary with regard to their food. While it is true that animals being fed large quantities of roots or succulent green feed do not need water to the same extent as those being fed largely on hay and grain, nevertheless, they should have clean water available at all times so that they may take it when desired. This is particularly true of rabbits.

With regard to feeding, rabbits are no exception to the rule that proper feeding is essential to success. There is nothing mysterious about feeding practice. The inexperienced rabbit keeper invariably will feed too much. The amount of greens, roots, moistened mashes, and such like feeds fed to rabbits should be only what can be eaten at once.

Some feeders prefer to keep hay before the rabbits at all times, but when this practice is followed it is necessary that racks should be used so that the feeds will not become soiled. Special occasions require special treatment. Thus, the nursing mother, or rabbits being fattened, or in moult, need treatment according to the condition.

Important Pointers on Culture of Tomatoes

TOMATOES are surface-rooting plants, and no attempt should be made to alter this natural habit. It is all to the good to have the great bulk of roots only just below the soil, for this makes it a fairly simple matter to regulate such important matters as watering and feeding. From these remarks it will readily be understood that a deep-planting must be avoided. A safe rule is to cover the uppermost roots with about half an inch of soil. Then, later on in the season, when rootlets begin to show freely on the surface of the soil, a light top dressing can be given with advantage.

Firm soil is another great safeguard of the health of tomatoes. Planting should not be done until the soil is in good condition. A simple test is to take a handful at random and squeeze it firmly in the palm. It should contain sufficient moisture to cling together in a ball. This is then dropped from a height of six or eight inches to the bed. It must not be so wet that the ball refuses to crumble up at the impact.

With soil in the right condition it is an easy matter to plant with sufficient firmness. Whenever tomatoes are watered, sufficient must be given to soak the soil.

More often than not, the first truss of flowers in the novice's greenhouse fails to set properly. This difficulty can easily be overcome by practising artificial fertilization after the sun has been shining for an hour or so and the air is brisk and dry. Of course, the flowers themselves must be fully open. Pollen distribution is effected either by jarring the plants vigorously with the finger or by making use of a rabbit's tail or piece of cottonwood tied to a bamboo cane.

Practically all tomatoes nowadays are grown on the single-stem system. This involves removal of all side growths as soon as they appear.

Narcissus and His Daffodils

By E. M. STRAIGHT

Supt. Dominion Experimental Station, Eganston

THE Narcissus, no doubt, received its name from Narcissus, who in Greek mythology was the son of the river god Cephissus and the nymph Leiriope, distinguished for his beauty. The seer Teiresias told his mother that he would have a long life, provided he never looked upon his own features. His rejection of the love of the nymph Echo drew upon him the vengeance of the gods. Having fallen in love with his own reflection in the waters of a spring, he pined away, or killed himself, and the flower that bears his name sprang up on the spot where he died.

According to Pausanias, Narcissus, to console himself for the death of a favorite twin sister, his exact counterpart, sat gazing into the spring to recall her features by his own. Narcissus, representing the early Spring flower which for a brief space beholds itself in the waters and then fades, is one of the many youths whose premature death is recorded in Greek mythology. The flower was regarded as a symbol of such death.

Five Groups of Narcissi

THERE are five well-marked groups of Narcissi, but the forms that have arisen by crossing are legion and present many difficulties.

N. Bulbocodium—These have been commonly known as the hoop-petticoat narcissi, because the coronet in the centre of the flower is over large in proportion to the other parts, and much expanded like the old hooded petticoats.

N. Pseudo-Narcissus—This is the true daffodil, common in woods and thickets in most parts of the north of Europe. Its leaves are five or six in number about one foot long. The stem is seldom more than eighteen inches long with the spathe single-flowered. The flowers are large, yellow, often scented and a little drooping, with a corolla deeply cleft into six lobes, and with a bell-shaped corona cuffed at the margin. In this species the corona is also very large and prominent, but more elongated and trumpet-shaped. Thus it will be seen that all daffodils are narcissi but all narcissi are not true daffodils.

N. Incomparabilis—This group includes all the mock narcissi or star daffodils, with coronets of medium size about half the length of the segments.

N. Tazetta—This group includes the polyanthus or bunch narcissi, a group well marked.

N. Poeticus—This is a small group known as the "poet" or "pheasant-eye" narcissi. The pheasant-eye narcissi has a perianth large and spreading with a corona very small and shallow. The Royal Horticultural Society has adopted another classification somewhat different, though based on like characters.

Soils for Narcissi

NARCISSE do well on a great variety of soils and under a great variety of conditions. All varieties are easy of culture, especially in natural surroundings where they are as thoroughly at home as weeds. A few varieties thrive in wet ground, but for the most part a good "fairy-loam," with no manure touching the bulbs, is to be advised. Drainage should be provided, as standing water is fatal. Moisture should be sufficient during the growing season, but later the bulbs must have a rest, at which time they should be given an opportunity to thoroughly dry out. A good sandy loam that becomes very dry during the Summer is about right for most varieties. Bone meal, wood ashes and well rotted stable manure applied the year before planting give good results.

Cultural Methods

THE best time to plant is in early Autumn, but one may obtain good results any time in October. We are convinced that nothing is to be gained by digging all the Narcissi and replanting every year in so far as the Narcissi are concerned. The bulbs may be left undisturbed for years in ordinary good loamy soil with even greater prospect of success than with too much handling, such as digging, drying and resetting as sometimes recommended. In the garden it is well to plant very strong bulbs, say six inches deep and three inches apart, and allow them to remain until they form strong groups, or until they show signs of too much exhaustion from numerous offsets. It is advised to cover the bulbs one and one-half times their own depth or size, measuring the solid part of the bulb and not the soft neck or top. It is sometimes possible to cover the beds with annuals after the bulbs have ceased flowering.

Most daffodils do fairly well in shade, but it must not be too dense. If too dense the flower stems will lack strength and the flowers suffer. In the flower border, to obtain the best effect, daffodils should be planted in large groups of irregular outline, each group or clump to contain one variety only. Avoid straight lines, circles and symmetrical designs. Masses of daffodils should always appear in the hardy flower border, where irregular and effective sweeps can be planted between the clumps of herbaceous plants, which in their turn grow up and hide, as well as shelter, the daffodil foliage while it is maturing the bulb.

To obtain very fine bloom daffodils should be cut while the flowers are still young, placed in water and allowed to expand in the greenhouse or sitting room. The blooms in this way are longer and finer in texture and purer in color than those that develop out-of-doors.

New Purple Verbena Is Prolific Bloomer

By DEAN HALLIDAY

THERE is a new lovely purple verbena, called verbena veitchii, which is truly hardy. This flower wants to be grown in the sun; the blossoms are of a medium purple color.

Last year many gardeners tried planting the verbena canadensis, also hardy, and of a purplish-blue color. It was a very prolific bloomer, producing flowers from June to October. In the fall new growth appeared which has remained all winter. The plant does well in the dry, sunny places of the rock garden, and its spreading habit of growth is very attractive over the rocks. In the winter it requires a protection of straw in the Northern States.

Verbena venosa is also hardy, with violet-purple colored flowers, growing to about fifteen inches in height. These last two verbenas can also be used very successfully as border plants in the herbaceous garden.

Increasing Production of Grass by Intensive Pasture Methods

IN 1930 some work was started and has been continued at the Experimental Farm at Agassiz on intensive pasture. Intensive pasturing may be defined as a system of pasturing under which a given acreage is made to carry a larger number of cows than it would have pastured in the ordinary manner. A greater return in pastureage is secured by dividing the area into a number of fields and grazing them in rotation. On high-priced land it is essential that the operator secure the maximum return from his grassland, hence intensive pasturing.

In the Agassiz experiment a six-acre, permanent pasture field was fenced into six plots of one acre each, with a lane arrangement along one side and water piped to each plot. In February or early March the whole was given a dressing of 300 pounds of super-phosphate of lime and fifty pounds of muriate of potash per acre annually. Six good milking cows were pastured for five days in Plot 1. They were then moved to Plot 2, and the same number of dry cows were put in Plot 1 to finish off the grazing. Every five days the front-line cows were moved to the next field and the followers occupied the plot vacated by the good milkers.

Whenever the followers were moved from a field, any remaining coarse grass was scythed off and the plot thoroughly harrowed to stir up the soil and distribute the droppings.

Fertilizer Added

AS each field was vacated the first time, 1,000 pounds per acre of nitrate of soda was applied, but no later dressings were given. This system of rotating allowed twenty days' rest for the grass between pasturings and produced an abundance of nutritious feed, high in digestible protein. Twelve cows were pastured on the six acres all the time, and during the best growing season more had to be put on to control the grass properly.

From the four-year results secured, the fertilized and rotated pastures allowed of grazing two cows per acre, where random pasturing would handle just half. Opposite this there is the initial cost of extra fencing, water equipment, extra labor and the cost of the fertilizer amounting to from $6 to $7 per acre.

Later, a trial was made using a three-field scheme instead of six, but this was not at all satisfactory. The animals had to be kept on a field longer than was wise, and then, when they were moved back, the grass had not properly recovered.

There is still a great deal to learn about controlled grazing and fertilizing of pastures. It is easy enough in this valley to make a beautiful sward, if one can afford the best seeds, with plenty of manure and fertilizers, and if he can turn animals off and on just when they should be. However, the pasture is there to feed the stock and not the stock to keep the grass in perfect condition. This should be remembered when planning an intensive pasture system.

The white trillium, botanically known as Trillium grandiflorum, has been selected by the Ontario Horticultural Association as the most suitable floral emblem for the province. The association will petition the Ontario Legislature to make it so by law.

Garden Week by Week

By NORMAN W. F. RANT, F.R.H.S.

ORANGE-colored flowers are cheerful and bright under dull skies, and in bright sunlight they do not look hot, as do scarlet and red blossoms, while they have the added advantage of combining with almost any other color. They go particularly well with blue and with yellow, and a splendid arrangement is a border of orange and scarlet.

Orange-hued flowers of pure color are not too plentiful, but sufficient of the easily-grown subjects of this color can be obtained to create a very brilliant Summer feature.

An old favorite is the pot marigold "Calendula officinalis." It is difficult to imagine a more intense coloration than a bed of such varieties as Prince of Orange and Radia. They may be sown outside at any time or they may be raised in frames or greenhouses. The great charm of this flower is the fact that it can be sown at any time and will bloom at any time.

Growing Zinnias

AN orange zinnia of a good strain will give a wonderful show of orange and will well repay any trouble that it may cause in the raising. They are somewhat tender and should be raised in one of two ways. They may be started early in frames or greenhouses and thoroughly hardened off and planted out in late May or June, or, and perhaps this is the best way, they may be sown outside in May where they are to flower, and then thinned out to eight inches apart. Zinnia Haagenana is not often grown, but it is dwarf and of a good orange color.

An uncommon plant from Mexico is Tithonia speciosa. It is somewhat zinnia-like in appearance and has flowers of an intense orange-scarlet. It is a half-hardy annual and is easy to raise from seed, and thrives in light soil. It was introduced into cultivation as long ago as 1833.

Orange hollyhocks are not plentiful. Sutton's Prince of Orange is about the only one worth growing. It is of a good dwarfish habit, with flowers of the best form. It comes pretty well true from seed, but one must expect some rogues.

Such antirrhinums as Orange King and Bonfire, perhaps not strictly orange, create a distinctly orange effect when massed, and they should be made a feature when such an effect is desired. Antirrhinums can hardly be surpassed for garden effect and the two varieties named are the best of a wide selection.

Orange Dahlias

THERE are one or two pompon dahlias that are distinctly orange and for late Summer and Autumn effect will fulfill a useful purpose. This particular section of the dahlia family are bushy and of stiff growth, which is a strong recommendation in a country where the wind often causes mischief among tall-growing plants.

Such lilies as croceum, umbellatum and its varieties, tigrinum, Hansonii and Henry II will naturally occupy a prominent position in an orange scheme. The species named are easy to grow and are not particular as to soil and situation. Gazania splendens is a fine plant for a hot Summer and will make a fine display in the front of a border or in a flower bed. It is not Winter hardy, but cuttings should be taken in the Fall and rooted in a frame or greenhouse. These will flower in the following year. The flowers open only when the sun is shining. "The Day-Lilies" (hemerocallis) are fine, permanent subjects of an orange color. Their grass-like foliage is an added attraction which is a splendid foil for other plants. The blooms are somewhat fleeting but are successively produced. Trollius Orange Globe is a very telling orange plant in the month of June.

Montebretias

MANY of the modern Montebretias are orange and they are a most effective plant where a height of two feet is needed. Such kinds as Star of the East, George Davidson and His Majesty are particularly good of the color under discussion.

In conclusion, one may mention Alstroemeria aurantiaca. It is fine for cutting. Some of the near-orange Oriental poppies and a few of the Red-Hot Pokers, "Kniphofias," and Senecio Clivorum are very suitable subjects.

The writer has treated the word orange in a somewhat elastic manner, but all the plants mentioned are very near to orange in color and, properly used, all are capable of brilliant effect.

The Popular Gladiolus Requires Little Care

THE gladiolus is deservedly one of the most popular flowers in Canada. Also, it needs very little care except at planting and digging time. Sandy loam, well fertilized, the previous year, is the ideal soil, but gladioli will do well on heavier soils. In a light, poor soil they would probably fail in a hot dry season. After planting, the soil must be cultivated frequently to keep down the weeds and render the surface loose.

During very dry weather a thorough soaking with water once a week is very beneficial and it is well to remember that when the time comes for cutting the blooms, at least two sets of leaves should be left on the plants, so that the corm will come to full growth and so be in good condition for growing next year.

There are hundreds of varieties to choose from, but the Primiflorus hybrids, which are quite distinct in appearance from the large-growing varieties, are becoming more popular every year. The corms, as obtained from the seedman, should be planted six inches deep and about three inches apart in a sunny position in the garden.

A standard four-inch flower pot holds approximately one pound of the average fertilizer; a tablespoon will hold about one ounce.

LAST OF THE MULLACHARD GRANTS

The following very interesting pen picture of Capt. W. Colquhoun Grant, the first independent settler on the land near Victoria, was written many years ago by Hon. J. W. McKay, member of the first Legislative Council and prominent Hudson's Bay officer. It has recently come to light among his papers in the possession of his daughter, Miss Agnes McKay.—Ed.

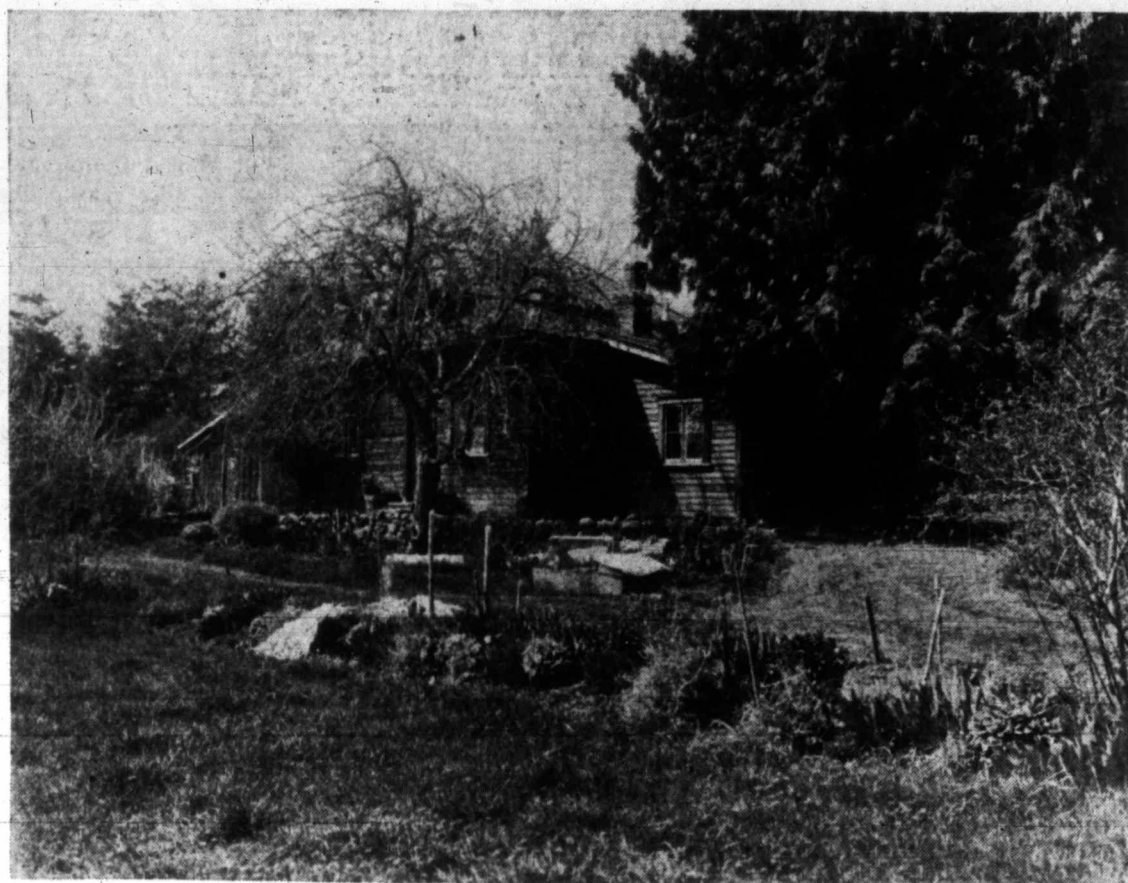

WALTER Colquhoun Grant was the last chief in the direct line of the Grants of Mullachard. He was the first one to settle on land as a farmer in what is now the province of British Columbia, on what is now known as the Muir's farm at Sooke. It was the first land taken up for actual permanent settlement, and Grant acquired it as a military grant. Grant intended to build a sawmill at Sooke. He went to San Francisco and chartered the Scotch bark Colquhoun to load piles. Her cargo not being ready when she arrived, her agent bought a cargo of lumber at Esquimalt at $80 per M and sold the same at Stockton, California, at $300 per M. Her master was paid $450 per month, her mate $250, and her able seamen $150 each.

Grant went to the Sandwich Islands to open an agency for the sale of farm produce and salted salmon, but as these commodities were not yet in evidence, his agency did not result in much material benefit to him. He, however, made the acquaintance of His Majesty King Kamehameha III of Hawaii, and sold him a meerschaum pipe for $150 which had once been the property of the late Duke of Sussex.

An Unusual Adventure

GRANT had an unusual adventure before he had been half an hour in the province of British Columbia. He came from England by what was then called the Panama route. The last portion of his journey was made in a canoe from Nisqually, on Puget Sound, to Victoria. The weather being fine, his Indians made a direct traverse from Point Wilson to Clover Point. By the time they landed they were both hungry and thirsty, and, after landing, the Indians proceeded to prepare themselves some food, having shown Grant the way to the fort. Grant shouldered his rifle and followed the path, which led along the east side of Beacon Hill. Suddenly he found himself surrounded by a herd of long-horned quadrupeds, who circled round him with angry mien and seemed to resent his intrusion. One, more inquisitive than the rest, approached to what he considered a dangerous proximity and received the contents of his rifle. The others ran away. Grant went to the fort, which he reached without further adventure, and was there accorded a hearty welcome by Mr. Chief Factor Douglas.

Descanting on his experiences, he mentioned the latest one to Mr. Douglas, saying that on his way from Clover Point he had been surrounded by a herd of wild buffalo, one of which he had shot. The Chief Factor received this communication with a merry twinkle in his eye. He had not observed that the gallant captain's weapon was a rifle and not a shotgun. In the course of the evening Angus MacPhail, the fort dairyman, reported with great wit that one of his best milk cows had been killed by some person who was evidently a good hunter, as the animal was hit in a vital spot and must have died instantly after being shot.

Lost at Albert Head

A SHORT time after Grant established himself at Sooke, he essayed to walk from there to the fort, and lost his way in the broken country at the back of Albert Head. Word having reached the fort that he was on his way and yet nothing being seen of him, a party of rangers were sent out to search for him. He was discovered in a very debilitated condition, having been for four days without food of any kind.

Grant partially surveyed Victoria District. He measured a line from Nankuan Hill, at the head of Victoria Arm, to the top of Mount Douglas, then to the top of Mount Tolmie, thence to a point on Gonzales Hill, with the ultimate intention of using them as base lines and completing the details of the survey by offsets from them.

After leaving his farm at Sooke, Grant went to California and engaged in gold mining for over two years. He hired himself out at first as a day laborer until he considered himself sufficiently expert to work a claim of his own. He secured a claim, pitched his tent and proceeded to develop the claim. The adjoining claim was held by an American, who had built himself a substantial cabin for his winter quarters. Grant's claim was rich; he stuck to his work earnestly.

Autumn with wet weather succeeded summer. One night, during a heavy downpour of rain, Grant discovered that his bed was wet. He struck a light and found a sluice head of water coursing through his tent. He must move camp. He remembered that his neighbor with the good cabin had been absent for over seventy-two hours, and that under the Miners' Regulations his claim and everything pertaining thereto was forfeit. He went to the cabin, burst open the door, removed his baggage from the tent to the cabin and turned in, as he thought, for the rest of the night. He was hardly well asleep before he was aroused by a loud knocking at the door of the cabin, accompanied by unusually strong language uttered in loud tones. He recognized the voice of his neighbor, threatening to blow the top of his head off, let daylight into him, load him down with cold lead and hurt him generally. Grant asked him to wait until he struck a light and dressed himself sufficiently to meet the requirements of the occasion. Having accomplished his arrangements and ascertained that his revolver was in good order and loaded, he quietly unbarred the door and asked his quarrelsome neighbor in. The latter by this time had cooled down and had time for reflection, and remembered that under the mining rules he had less right to the cabin than the party in possession. It was quickly agreed by the two men that the matter should be settled by reference to a meeting of the miners.

The late owner of the cabin took refuge with the nearest miner in the camp and Grant was left in possession. A miners' meeting was held the next day and, when it was decided that Grant was the lawful owner of the cabin, his late neighbor quietly acquiesced in the decision, sold his claim and provisions to Grant, and bought into a whisky shop with the proceeds.

Grant Secures a House

GRANT was now provided with a house and provisions for the winter. Having two good claims he hired assistants and worked out the claims before the next dry season and left for San Francisco with several thousand dollars in his pocket. He lived high for a couple of weeks, then cooled down and chartered a schooner, loaded her with provisions and notions, sailed for Victoria, and sold his cargo there and at Nanaimo at good figures. I may here remark that Captain Pattle, the master and part owner of the schooner, was one of the discoverers of coal at Bellingham Bay. As soon as the autumn rains began to fall, Grant again returned to the mines. This time he took up a claim in the neighborhood of Yreka. He did fairly well during the winter. In the early spring some marauding braves from the Klamath band of Indians killed some miners in his neighborhood. A miners' meeting was held at which a volunteer company was raised with the object of bringing the Indians to justice. Some of the miners found out that Grant had been an officer in the British Army. It was agreed to offer him the command of the volunteers. Grant consented to take command, provided good discipline and implicit obedience to his orders were maintained in the corps and that his claim be held and worked during his absence and the gross proceeds thereof be handed him on his return. These stipulations were agreed to. Grant saw to the equipping, provisioning and arming of his command and started on the warpath. After considerable trouble, and forced marches, they found the Indians encamped in a strong position. Grant, however, lost no time in arranging his little force and bringing them into action. The attack was so sudden that the Indians were quickly routed and some prisoners taken, without any loss on his side. On the march home his second in command brutally murdered one of the prisoners, and Grant was so disgusted at this unnecessary inhumanity that he resigned his command and returned to camp alone.

A New Occupation

WATER was becoming scarce when he reached his claim. He took what proceeds were proffered to him from the parties who had worked his claim and, being a good sportsman, he made up his mind to supply game to the camp during the dry season, and made quite a lot of money at this occupation. One morning he wounded a buck, as he thought fatally. The animal, however, took over the hills to the westward. He followed him until well on into the afternoon, when he came upon him and shot him dead.

He was now on a high hill, the top of which was bare. He carried the venison to the bare spot, from which he had a good view of the Pacific Ocean. The mail steamer from Oregon was in sight, heading southward; a large schooner was at anchor in a little sheltered bay, with her loose sails hanging in the trails, evidently awaiting a favorable wind to take her departure. At the sight of the ocean his thoughts turned homeward. Why waste his life at manual labor when with his advantages he might aim at some occupation more in keeping with his early habits and training. He abandoned his game and strode toward the coast and reached the bay before the schooner sailed. He had with him his bag of gold dust, and took passage in the schooner for San Francisco. The Crimean War was being fought, so he returned to England by way of Panama, joined his old regiment in the ranks, and was soon busily engaged fighting the battles of his country. Before the close of the war he rose to the rank of lieutenant.

Fights Last Battle

THE Greys were ordered to India to help in quelling the Indian Mutiny. There was no transport for their horses, so they sailed without them and had to find mounts in the land of the enemy. The results of Grant's varied experiences now shone forth and were appreciated by the Commanding Officer. He was entrusted with the important task of finding horses for the regiment, which was quickly and well mounted and ready to take the field. Grant was promoted to the rank of captain and very soon distinguished himself wherever his regiment was engaged and, when it was ordered home, he accompanied it to the port of embarkation with a light heart and high hopes of again reaching home. But alas! a few days before embarking he had an attack of dysentery, from which he died in forty-eight hours. He had fought his last battle and paid his last debt. Grant was a man of fine physique. He stood over six feet two and was well proportioned. He was a good scholar, had many accomplishments—was a good linguist, had travelled extensively—had ridden from Constantinople to Vienna, had followed the route of the Iron Duke's victorious army through Spain, besides journeys in other countries of Europe. His genial, affable manners have left sunny memories in the minds of all those with whom he came into contact. He was a good conversationalist, and his flashes of wit and intelligent discourse would enliven the social chat round the evening fire whether in camp or in cabin. Through all the changes and vicissitudes of his career he never lost the calm dignity and manners incidental to his race and early training. He never forgot that he was a Highland chieftain, firm as the rocks of Craigellachie. His motto was ever "Stand Sure." "Stand Sure," befitting attributes for British Columbia's first settler, the first one to leave his own country and associations and make his home in what was then a wild and unknown country. May he rest in peace.

Shrines of Britain's Glory

The Science Museum—Part II

INSTRUMENTS and appliances used in the experiments and research work of the most illustrious scientists of the nineteenth century, Lord Kelvin and Sir William Crookes, remind us that numerous discoveries by other contemporary scientists were accomplished largely by the suggestions of Kelvin, or by the use of the ingenious appliances invented by Crookes. Kelvin is best remembered by the general public for his work in connection with the development of submarine telegraphy, and it was mainly due to him that cable connection was successfully established between Great Britain and America in 1866; while the vacuum pump invented by Crookes played an important part in the development of electric light, for by its use was secured the high state of vacuum required for the perfection of the incandescent lamp, which displaced the earlier arc light, and it was by the use of Crookes' tubes that Prof. Roentgen discovered X-rays and that Niels Finsen was able to produce his ultra-violet rays.

One of the most interesting sections of the museum is that which enables us to trace the evolution of the modern steam engine from the crude pumping appliance of the early eighteenth century down to the production of the latest types of locomotives, marine and other engines. Among the exhibits are to be found the first beam engine to pump water, which was built by Thomas Newcomen in 1720; the famous "Old Bess" pump, which replaced the engine to which James Watt applied for the first time his separate condenser; Heslop's winding and pumping engine, which was installed for raising coal from the mine to the surface in 1795; and the double-acting high pressure engine invented by Richard Trevithick in 1800.

Several experimental models constructed by James Watt, and also his earliest power engine with the sun and planet motion, which was erected at Soho, near Birmingham, in 1788, remind us that the really first practicable engine was given to the world by this great genius, for prior to his time the so-called steam engine had been nothing more than a pump, cumbersome, slow-working and wasteful of fuel, and it was his remarkable series of inventions which left the steam engine in its many varied forms virtually as we know it at the present time.

The early days of the steam railroad are recalled by the sight of a group of locomotives, including the historic "Rocket," which was built by George Stephenson in 1829 to take part in the competition arranged by the Liverpool & Manchester Railway Company, and which gained for the famous engineer the prize of five hundred pounds; and "Puffing Billy," the oldest locomotive in the world, which was constructed by William Hedley in 1813, and which hauled coal at the Wylam Collieries for nearly half a century.

Other notable exhibits in connection with the history of steam power include the tools used by James Nasmyth and the original model of his steam hammer, which he patented in 1842; and also the engine and model of "The Comet," which was one of the earliest passenger steamboats, having been built by Henry Bell for service on the River Clyde, where it attained a speed of six knots per hour, which was regarded as a most remarkable performance in those days.

The many and varied chemical discoveries of Sir Humphrey Davy are recalled by his first safety lamp for miners, which he invented in 1815, and which has ever since proved a boon to colliery workers all over the world. The famous chemist devoted three years of his life to research work in connection with fire-damp in coal mines before he produced his lamp, which he refused to patent, on the ground that he had no desire to benefit financially from his labors in the cause of humanity, but his disinterestedness was recognized by the presentation of some valuable plate by the British Colliery owners. Davy also wrote poetry, and some of his verses were highly commended by his friends, Robert Southey and Samuel Taylor Coleridge, who were among the first persons to inhale the nitrous oxide, or laughing gas, after it had been discovered by Davy.

A model of the ingenious mono-rail car created by Louis Brennan, the inventor of the torpedo which bears his name, is of special interest to transportation experts, many of whom believe it will be extensively adopted at some future time, for it has not only proved very successful in actual operation, but it solves some serious traffic problems. The car, which runs on a single rail, and is supported and kept in equilibrium by a couple of gyroscopes, making three thousand revolutions per minute, is capable of attaining a speed of considerably over a hundred miles per hour.

Among the many other exhibits which conjure up memories of famous men are: The calculating machine invented by Charles Babbage, one of the founders of the Astronomical Society and the British Association; the first brougham, which was built in 1832 for Lord Brougham, after whom it is named; a hand press operated by Benjamin Franklin during the time that he worked as a printer in London; a model and mirror of Lord Rosse's reflector, with which that great astronomer made many of his notable discoveries; a model of George Westinghouse's brake and couplings for railway trains; and Buckland's Fish Culture Collection, with many live fish in tanks.—Charles Conway.

Lives With Rubber Heart

PROFESSOR Smirnov, who last year startled the world by restoring a man to life forty-five minutes after his heart had stopped, has saved the life of a Russian sailor by sewing up his heart. The sailor was stabbed in the heart during a quarrel and was taken to Prof. Smirnov's surgery. The sailor's heart was taken out and replaced by an artificial rubber heart worked by a tiny electric motor. This kept the blood in circulation while the wound in the natural heart was being stitched. The natural heart was then replaced. The whole operation took one hour and forty minutes. The sailor is recovering.

Most Newsworthy Figure in Dominion Once Fortune's Soldier

PARLIAMENT boasts no more colorful figure than Hon. H. H. Stevens. His career has been a sequence of dramatic episodes. The spotlight turns on him today as it has repeatedly turned in the past quarter of a century. In a sense he is the Conservative "man of the hour." His eloquent defence and self-vindication in the House a few days ago was a signal for uproarious applause from the majority of his own party as well as from sections of the Opposition.

"Where is Harry Stevens heading for?" is a question on everybody's lips. The one certainty is that his courage will carry him through: that he will neither turn back nor be silenced. He is an old crusader—and he will see this crusade through just as well as he did all the others.

Emigrant boy, rural school teacher, stage driver, prospector, soldier of fortune, accountant, municipal crusader, journalist, broker, Minister of the Crown in two Governments, Front Bench and debator par excellence—will he round out his record with something topping them all?

Colorful Career

AFTER the tempest in the House the other day, which was only made to subside when Sir George Perley arose and called the attention of the Speaker to the fact that Mr. Stevens was out of order, the ex-Minister, having served notice that he would move the adoption of the price spread report, slipped away for a badly-needed and well-earned vacation. But when Parliament resumes on May 20, it is a safe bet that he will again be the storm-centre—that the debate concerning business abuses and their reform will see him crusading once more with his ancient courage and eloquence.

When the drive against alleged unfair practices in business was launched by means of a fighting address delivered to the Retail Merchants Association of Toronto on January 15, 1934—the spark which resulted in the "Mass Buying and Price Spreads" explosion shortly afterwards—the central figure was a man already well-known to the Canadian public. The highlights of his career have been these:

Born at Bristol, of Devonshire and Cornwall stock, fifty-six years ago.

At eight years came to Ontario with his parents. Educated at Peterburg schools. Taught school for a brief period.

A Soldier of Fortune

WENT west to the romantic province of British Columbia, then in its crude, robust pioneer days. Drove stage along bandit-infested routes. Prospected for gold. Didn't find much.

Drifted down to Seattle and enlisted in the 9th Infantry Regiment, serving at the siege of Tsing Tsing, tramping with his colleagues the long march to Peking, later assisting Uncle Sam's forces to quell the Philippine rebel, Auginaldo. Rounded out this Pacific episode with a long vagabondage around the South Sea Islands.

Returned to Vancouver and prepared for a business career. Trained for accountant. Worked with Gerry McGeer, now prominent Liberal and stormy Mayor of Vancouver. Became active in the Board of Trade. Was enlisted in the Good Government League of

Was keenly impressed by Arthur Meighen, and unconsciously modeled his own parliamentary style after him. First crusade

HON. H. H. STEVENS

Vancouver, where his first public crusade was launched—against saloons. Won the reputation of being a fellow who "got action" when he went after things.

Followed Meighen

THE election of 1911 came along. He was sought as nominee, although he was just over thirty. At first refused to take the suggestion seriously, but decided to get in, finally, and fight. Did fight—and won! Won the reputation later of being the candidate who had never lost a battle, a record which stood until Ian Mackenzie beat him in 1930.

The House knew him for years as an industrious, sincere back-bencher. Soon won the warm friendship of Sir Robert Borden, was against Oriental immigration. When Meighen came to the leadership he picked the member from Vancouver as his Minister of Trade and Commerce. When Meighen's party was riddled at the general election of 1921, Stevens was one of the few front-benchers to survive.

When Meighen wanted a big job done, shortly after the election of 1925, he knew a man who would do it for him. That man was Stevens, and the big job was the launching of an inquiry into lax practices of customs collection.

Though ill and tired and badly needing a rest, Harry Stevens ploughed through hundreds of files, followed clues through mazes of evidence, accumulated a telling case. The time came when Meighen decided the trap should be sprung, and went in search of his lieutenant. Stevens had already put on his coat and was preparing to leave the House at 11 p.m. In those days the House sat on "far into the night." Meighen approached him, as he was leaving; said that he wished the motion put at once. As the clock was striking midnight Stevens made his dramatic move in the House, stirring events followed, and before the vote of censure on the Government which followed could be reached, Parliament had been dissolved as a direct result of the crusade. That was the highlight of Mr. Stevens' career up to that time.

Recognized by Premier

HE again emerged victor in 1926, and for the next four years was a powerful front-bench critic on the Opposition benches. In 1930 he went down fighting; but his merit was so completely recognized by Premier Bennett that he was the first man to be offered a Cabinet seat; and a riding was opened for him in East Kootenay.

His career as Minister of Trade and Commerce is familiar history. So is the amazing chain of circumstances beginning with his address at Toronto—given in place of Mr. Bennett, who was away at Calgary—moving along to the appointment of a parliamentary committee to investigate, to the sensational disclosures which rocked the country, the appointment of a royal commission to complete the work, the publication of the famous "pamphlet," the tense drama when he was requested to apologize for alleged inaccuracies in the pamphlet, and chose to resign rather than back down, and so along to the hectic three-quarters of an hour in the House on April 12 this year.

Forced Government Inquiry

NO one will deny that the moving spirit of the price-spreads inquiry was Mr. Stevens. Indeed, he precipitated it on the heads of lukewarm or even hostile colleagues. So overwhelming was the flood of approbation from all over the country when he made his Toronto address that the Government had no recourse but to hold the inquiry.

Even when he resigned from the chairmanship he continued to be a dominating figure. The 500-page report, issued last week, has "Harry Stevens" written large across its pages. Many of the proposed reforms were his own unaided suggestions. The Federal Trade and Industry Commission was running through his brain many months before the writing of the report was even begun.

Here is news for millionaires! Savants at children's clinics in Kazan, Middle Russia, where experiments have been made to determine the medical value of the roe of the Caspian Sea sturgeon, have discovered that life can be supported on a diet of caviare alone.

They have proved it an excellent diet for tuberculosis sufferers and a sovereign remedy for rickets. Twenty children between the ages of ten months and four years suffering from rickets were fed on caviare. In seventeen cases the symptoms disappeared.

Five Princes Will Be Guests of Honor at Banquet of Vintners

Will Commemorate Feast of Five Kings Given Nearly Six Centuries Ago—Ancient Customs Will Be Celebrated at Function

(Copyright, 1935, by the North American Newspaper Alliance, Inc.)
LONDON.—Five Princes of the House of Windsor are to attend a banquet May 15 at Vintners' Hall, headquarters of the company which for many hundreds of years has rejoiced in the name of "Ye Ancient Mysterie of Vintners of the City of London." The guests will be the Prince of Wales, the Dukes of York, Gloucester and Kent, and Prince Arthur of Connaught, and their visit will commemorate the "Feast of the Five Kings" given in 1363 by Sir Henry Picard, Master of the Company, when Edward III of England, David of Scotland, John of France, Waldemar III of Denmark and Amadeus VI of Cyprus were the guests.

On May 15 there will be about fifty guests, all men, and as in 1363, there will be five cheques, one for each Prince, while the ancient custom of the presentation of cygnets to the Master (the Earl of Athlone) by the Swan Warden will be observed with its age-long wealth of ceremonial.

The swans that frequent the upper reaches of the Thames are owned in part by the Vintners, the two other owners being the King, who is "seigneur of the swans," and the Dyers' Company. The ceremony of presentation begins in the middle of dinner when the guests hear distant music. Then the doors are flung open and quickly garbed bandmen playing reed instruments march in, followed by the company's swan herdsman and two assistant herdsman, six swan uppers in jerseys and white ducks, the headle, the stavesman, and finally, accompanied by his standard bearer and two cooks bearing the roast cygnets on high, the swan warden gowned in Tudor clothes.

The swan warden seeks the acceptance of the master of roast cygnets and the master replies, "Let them be served, Mr. Swan."

There were Vintners of London organized as a corporate body in 1205, and it is possible that the foundation date of the Guild was at least a century earlier. But it was not until 1363, when the Feast of the Five Kings was held, that Edward III granted to the Mystery of Vintners, by patent, the exclusive privilege in London of trading wines in Gascony.

Silent Show To Be Given At Museum

LONDON (CP).—London is to have a "house of hush," a house so quiet that in it a person may be able to hear the proverbial pin drop. There is to be a "silence" exhibition in June, at which it will be possible to see—but not to hear—the following:

A silent house, with silent lift and silent locks, soundproof ventilating windows, soundproof doors; silent motorcycles; a noiseless motorcar; silent vacuum cleaners; silent road drills; a silent factory room.

The exhibition, at the Science Museum, South Kensington, will be organized by the Anti-Noise League, of which Lord Horder is president.

PICTURE-STYLE OF OLD YEARS

Changing Fashions of a Generation Mark Variety of Tastes

CHRISTCHURCH, N.Z. (CP).—The Sun, in its twenty-first anniversary issue, ran a page illustrating weird fashions worn by women during that period.

In the face of the interest in games and sport of all kinds which has so developed in the past years as to have fostered an entirely new line of fashion, it is amusing to read, back in 1916, the assertion of an authoritative writer that "lawn tennis played in good style is in no way contrary to the ideals of feminine beauty."

Another item said: "Her hat was of deep blue with corse velvet streamers and flora garniture, finished with a looped bow. The narrow brim was turned up at one side and faced with ivory crepe de Chine veiled in two thicknesses of pale pink tulle." Believe it or not, this hat was in fashion in 1914. Only twenty-one years ago every-one wore plumes.

"There is a word of sadness about these old fashion notes. Where are all those gallant race-goers now? It is only a matter of one and twenty years, but life is such a little thing, and the race so quickly run. Hats off to the women of 1914-15, with their black velvet, their Parma violets and their plumes. They kept those plumes up. 'The Dolly Varden' hat, with its flavor of Dickens, its ribbons and its quaint posy beneath the brim, was a distinct war-time resurrection about 1915. Checkmate again to the pessimist who declared that hard times beget hard headgear."

Times were changing, however. Already the clip of the scissors could be heard in the distance. In 1918 hoes and hat crowns began to rise. Hairdressers, in their sanctums, devised new styles and hinted at the forthcoming "buste"

POSTOFFICE LOOKING FOR IDEAL VOICE

Will Be Used to Tell the Time to Telephone Subscribers

LONDON (BUP).—A "perfect telephone voice" is being sought by British postoffice officials.

The "talking clock," from which telephone subscribers will be able to hear the time by dialling a certain number, is ready, but the post-office engineers—who designed it cannot create the "ideal voice" to speak the hours.

So the postoffice is organizing a competition throughout England to find the voice.

Tests Over Telephone

Experiments have shown that a woman's voice is the most suitable for the sound film records through which the clock "speaks." Only the 15,000 telephone operators in Britain will be eligible for the contest. All the tests of the competitors' voices will be made over the telephone. This is to make sure that the perfect voice is still perfect when the subscriber hears it. Judges will be a committee of two—ordinary men and a woman representing the public.

When England's perfect voice has been found, more competitions will be held to find one for Scotland, one for Wales, and another for Northern Ireland.

SAYS HOMER A PLAGIARIST

LONDON (BUP).—The story of Homer's Iliad, greatest of classical Greek poems, the epic of Helen of Troy, whose face "launched a thousand ships," originated in an Indian poem written centuries before Homer was born.

This sensational statement is made by Prof. R. A. Datta, lately of Lahore University, India, collector of Eastern art treasures, who has devoted his life to research among ancient manuscripts in order to compile a history of the world's civilization.

He has in his possession, he declares, manuscripts 3,000 and 4,000 years old which prove that Helen came, not from Troy, but from Ceylon, and that the Trojan War was fought between Ceylon and Ajodhya, or the ancient India.

In short, he declares, Homer was just a crib. He changed the name of Rama to Menelaos, Sita to Helen and Ravana to Paris. It was Sita's dusky beauty, it seems, that launched the thousand ships of the hero Rama.

Prof. Datta believes that Greek, Egyptian and Mayan civilizations were originally derived from India. "The Greeks," he said, "originally migrated from the Indian province of Magadha. The name became Machada and then Macedonia. A clan of the Magadha were the Raj Greka. It is easy to see how the name Greka became Greek."

COUNTRY IS FLORAL EDEN

Decorations in New Zealand Indicate Wide Range of Beauty

CAMPERDOWN, New Zealand (CP).—When a ball takes place in this country there is ample scope and will for floral decoration.

At the Royal Camperdown Hospital Ball, held in the Theatre Royal, huge archways were arranged over each of the four doorways, and made a brilliant splash of color, composed of greenery, delphiniums, hollyhocks, roses, bougainvillea and Romney poppies. The whole front of the stage was converted into an herbaceous border, with a miniature lawn in front, and a wide band of masses of flowers, zinnias, hydrangea, phlox, everlastings, asters and gladioli.

Making a background for this picture were miniature orange trees and holly trees growing in tubs. Huge mixed bowls of hydrangea, agapanthus, tiger lilies and Romney poppies were placed high up on the walls of the ledges on each side of the stage. The viceregal dais had a background of bowls of the same flowers.

In the supper-room all the pillars were festooned with greenery, and garlands of ivy and laurel were strung between them. The windowsills were banded with gladioli, zinnias and African marigolds.

He would not travel first-class, he said, if he had a hundred million pounds. Blackwell enlisted with the Second Battalion, New Zealand, and was at Gallipoli. The doctors built him a new face for him. It cost him $10,000. His two brothers were killed on the second day in Gallipoli. He also served in the Boer War.

Chislehurst Caves Used as Shelter in Sham Attack by Air

Natural "Funk-Holes" in Kent Capable of Accommodating More Than Thirty Thousand in Emergency—Air-Locked by Sloping Boards

KENT (BUP).—Chislehurst caves, in Kent, ninety feet from the surface and capable of accommodating more than 30,000 people in an emergency, were used recently for a demonstration to show how civilians can be protected from bomb and gas attacks. A few months ago War Office experts carried out a survey of the twenty-two miles of caves with a view to using them as anti-bombing and anti-gas attack "funk-holes."

They found that the caves, which were used during the war to store high explosives, could be made gas-proof within a few hours and supplies of food for 80,000 people stored for several days.

Received Casualties
During the demonstration air-planes dropped mock gas bombs while scores of nurses, doctors and first-aid workers received casualties and took them on stretchers to the gas-proof shelters in the depths of the caves.

The shelters were air-locked by a system in which sloping boards are placed near the entrance, off which the gas "rolls" in an outward direction. The purpose of the demonstration was, it is said, to train more British Red Cross workers to keep calm in a gas attack.

TO EMPLOY SECRET FUEL

New Combination Will Be Used in Attempt to Break Record

LONDON (BUP).—A non-stop flight around the world will be possible with engines employing a new fuel combination now being secretly perfected in Britain, it is claimed.

An attempt on the distance record of 5,657 miles, held by Cedus and Rossi, French pilots, is to be made this year. It is probable that a standard monoplane will be adapted to use the new engine and fuel combination for this first attempt.

The key to success lies in the successful employment of liquid hydrogen in conjunction with another fuel. Behind the venture are Captain Richard Humber, who has made several outstanding flights in Africa, and Rudolf Erren, who fought under Baron von Richthofen and Gert Goring in the war, and has already achieved distinction in England with his hydrogen engines.

Last year a British company was formed to exploit Erren's plan for ships to distill sea-water and to split it under pressure into oxygen and hydrogen for use in an engine which was really a combination of the steam and internal combustion engine.

QUEEN ASSISTS BUSY MOTHER

LONDON (CP).—For many years Queen Mary has been interested in the work of the Crossway Central Mission, and she always reads the magazine published in connection with the mission.

In a recent number there appeared an appeal on behalf of a woman living with her two children in an upstairs flat. Her landlady would not allow her to leave a perambulator in the passage, and the harassed mother badly needed a folding perambulator which she could carry up to her flat.

The mission has received a message from Buckingham Palace that the Queen had seen the appeal and has sent it from Eastbourne to an official at the Palace with a direction that a double-folding type of pram which she had seen at the British Industries Fair should be sent to the woman.

Gains Sudden Fame at Ripe Old Age

DUSTY MATHEWS, Oldest seaman in Eastbourne, who addressed King George as "Captain" recently, and who is puzzled by the sudden fame heaped on him. The 86-year-old veteran, with mutton-chop whiskers and small gold-rings in his ears, still thinks it was a nice social title to confer upon his monarch. "I told him, Dusty Mathews, that I knew his muni and dad."

FAMOUS PLANE WILL BE SOLD

Epoch-Making Southern Cross Nearing End of Its Useful Life

SYDNEY, N.S.W. (BUP).—The Southern Cross, probably the world's most famous airplane, is for sale. Its owner, Sir Charles Kingsford Smith, who has made most of his epoch-making flights, including the trans-Pacific flight, in the machine, has decided to part with it.

"The Commonwealth Government may like to buy the Southern Cross for an historic keepsake before the old 'bus' wears right out," declares Sir Charles. "I am offering it to them."

The Southern Cross has flown about 350,000 miles. It is at present being engaged in short flights. "It is still quite safe for a few hundred hours more joy-flight—I would not fly it if it were not—but it will shortly need to be rebuilt if its life of usefulness is to be extended," Sir Charles added. "The rebuilding would cost between £500 and £800—which I cannot afford."

KING WILL LIGHT JUBILEE BEACONS

LONDON (CP).—As part of the King's Silver Jubilee celebrations His Majesty will light a huge wooden beacon, built by Boy Scouts, in Hyde Park, Monday, May 6.

The beacon, twenty feet high, will act as a signal fire for the Boy Scouts' chain of beacons all over the country at 10 p.m. Five minutes before that time the King will press a button in Buckingham Palace. This will complete an electric circuit and so set fire to the central beacon in Hyde Park.

Making Move to Keep to Promise Of Magna Carta

Royal Commission Sitting in London to Find Cure for Delay in Workings of Law—Multiplicity of Signs for London Streets—Automatic Timetables Arrive

LONDON (BUP).—Somewhere or other in that famous document "Magna Carta" which King John "signed" in the presence of the Barons—i.e. the Freeman—in the field of Runnymede in 1215, there is a declaration that "To no man will we delay or deny justice." In the course of the 720 years which have elapsed since then the principle, at first glance, that is, seems to have been lost sight of.

There has recently been sitting in London a Royal Commission on the Despatch of Business at Common Law. That there is great delay between the launching of an action and its hearing in Court is indisputable. That the costs of an action are frequently out of all apparent proportion to the intrinsic value of the subject in dispute is also beyond question. The usual extreme cases have, of course, been cited. As to expense, there was quoted a case of a will dispute. The estate amounted to £10,000; the costs £9,400. There was another where the taxed costs in a suit involving £300 exceeded £2,000.

Need More Judges
As to the question of delay, that can be cured by appointing more judges (which involves paying for them) and rearranging the system of circuits under which the judges in rotation attend the Assize towns all over the country at varying intervals. This wastes much time and causes much delay, but vested interests and local ideas of prestige in the provinces stand in the way of change.

In the matter of costs, half the trouble arises from the persistence of litigants. Counsel's and solicitors' time is just as valuable whether a dispute raises round a penny or a pound. Another thing which raises costs is the litigant's insistence on retaining the most expensive counsel on cases which could quite equally well be conducted by almost any member of the Bar.

If I call in a world-famous physician and occupy his time daily for a week because my baby is cutting a tooth, I must expect to pay him as a world-famous physician instead of as the general practitioner whom I should have consulted. The moral is obvious.

A Sign Is Given Them
Strangers who see our London streets for the first time are amazed by the number of signs and cabbalistic symbols of one sort and another which adorn them (if that is the appropriate word) as directions to drivers and for traffic generally. Here is an eight-foot post, striped and speckled like Laban's rods, with a large amber globe set atop. Here again is another post bearing an inscription that traffic signals are ahead, and here is a post with a cluster of the forecast signals of red, green and yellow lights. Now we have a tall pillar with a sort of double triangle in red, a row of small reflectors below that and, below again, the intimation that there is a major road ahead.

Further on we come to a symbol which tells the initiated that a school is near, and another which indicates that there is a concealed crossing not far away. And this week there have been added to all these another thing. Here and there the roads bristle with large two-foot-wide discs with the simple legend "30" upon them. They tell us that thirty miles is the limit of speed. When a driver has interpreted, read, learned, marked and indignantly digested all these, he can snatch a moment to see if any stray pedestrian happens to be in his way.

An Active Brain
All, or nearly all, these things have sprung from the brain of one most active Minister of Transport, Mr. Leslie Hore-Belisha. He seems to have read that "these people have asked for a sign" and to have decided that it shall be given unto them—in thousands.

People often wonder how and when and under what conditions he has thought of all his schemes to brighten our streets. Well, he has a primrose and blue retreat where he can think free from disturbance. He found that the decorations and furnishings of his room in Whitehall distracted him. So, in consultation with the Office of Works he evolved an entirely new scheme of decoration calculated at once both to stimulate the brain and soothe the nerves of a modern Minister of Transport. The walls have been decorated in a delicate primrose hue. His furniture is a simple neo-Chippendale, upholstered in a restful shade of blue.

He has on the mantelpiece a caricature of himself as a policeman. Also he has a child's toy which resembles the product of an alliance between a duck and a Belisha-Beacon, which is the popular name for the Laban-poles and amber globes.

Everything in the room is British, including the "Persian" carpet. His mahogany desk is covered with blue leather. His two telephones are in a delicate shade of blue.

Only one thing, so far, defeats Mr. Hore-Belisha. That is the noise from the Thames Embankment. But he is going to beat that, even if he has to stop the traffic altogether.

Automatic Tables
The railway timetables in this country of a crowded and complicated railway system are always a trouble to the uninitiated. He who only once in a blue moon takes a railway journey, to say nothing of a cross-country journey, gazes at the mass of figures and cross references and footnotes, and gives up in despair.

But the mystery of the timetable is solved. The automatic timetable has arrived. In future all you have to do is to press a button—and there it is.

The first "mechanical informant" in the world has just made its appearance in London, on the stations of the Southern Railway. Soon every station on the line will have one.

It is a clever machine. There is a sort of window on the level of the eyes of an average height woman. It shows you a space something like a miniature stage. It is illuminated with electric lights something like stage lighting. On what may be called the back-drop is a card on which are printed the names of the various stations which you can reach from, say, Victoria. Each name has a number opposite. Below the stage is a keyboard of buttons, also numbered.

Suppose you want to go to Brighton. Brighton is numbered 16. Press button 16. Presto! a card slides down like the curtain on a stage does. On it are the times of the trains to and from Brighton. That ought to be clear enough, but to make the thing plainer still the cards are colored. "Week-end trains" "up" and "down" are yellow and pink respectively. Sundays green and orange. Take your finger off the button, the card slides up again, and the numbered list of stations returns.

"Give the public a button to press and the public is happy" is the creed of the inventor.

Signs of the Times
Our new law against betting and lotteries (aimed, humbly, that we are, not so much against these sins as against the Irish Sweepstakes) enacts, among other things, that it shall be a punishable offence for anyone to publish the results of a sweepstake.

This week the foreign newspapers were late in delivery to the public in London. When at last we got them we found on certain pages a large "black-out."

The papers had contained a list of the winning numbers in a French lottery, and the London distributors had been obliged to spend hours in blotting out laboriously the horrible record in every copy so that we might not be contaminated!

KISS FOR WIFE COST HIM $15

Took Only Second, Says Motorist, But Guilty Just the Same

LONDON (CP).—Because he kissed his wife while driving a car, David Morgan Davies, of Pinner, was summoned at Hendon for driving in such a position as not to have proper control over the car.

A police patrol who was following Davies for a traffic light offence said when Davies put his arm around his wife and kissed her, the car swerved five feet to the side. Davies denied this and said the kiss "took only a second."

A solicitor said that Davies had been in France for some time, and his wife had met him at Victoria. For failing to obey traffic signals Davies was fined $15. The summons for driving without proper control was dismissed.

CANADIAN BEAR NEW DELICACY

British Epicures Have Meat Cooked Rather Differently from Local Hunters

LONDON (BUP).—Canadian bear is the latest delicacy introduced to British palates. It was served with "fixings" at dinner parties in London recently.

The chef responsible for its introduction cabled to Canada for his bear, and it was shipped to him from Calgary.

Epicures who tasted the new dish described the flavor of the meat as "extremely delicate, resembling that of a young wild boar."

The recipe, a Russian one, is: One bear roasted, served with fresh peas dipped in Kummel and wine sauce made from old Burgundy, honey cakes and pine seeds.

What's New and Interesting for the Women

Youth Is Keynote Of Spring Styles From Hollywood

By MOLLIE MERRICK
(Copyright, 1935, by the North American Newspaper Alliance, Inc.)

HOLLYWOOD, Cal.—Youth is the keynote of all Spring styles from Hollywood. Easter parties revealed one amazing evening gown after the other, with Gertrude Michael well in the lead for frocks that are decidedly different.

Take her "Red Riding Hood" dress, for example. It's made of sheer black tulle, highlighted with bands of black crepe satin and rhinestone clips. The skirt flows to the floor from a rather high waistline and gets fuller as it goes. And the slender bodice is simply "V'd" in front and back.

For a wrap, if the evening is not too cool, Miss Michael wears a single thickness of tulle made into a waist-length cape and a pointed hood not unlike the one in which the original Red Riding Hood faced the wolf.

"It's amazing," Gertrude Michael tells you, "how well this little hood keeps your hair in place. It's not entirely ornamental."

And we can't help wondering if the taffeta cape and lace "fascinator" of your mother's day aren't coming back into vogue under a new guise.

Printed Taffeta

Printed silk taffeta once again rustles into the smart drawing-room cut simply as a dinner dress, or in a more sophisticated manner for the formal evening frock.

Exotic Marie Oberon is charming in a dancing dress of gunmetal grey taffeta smeared with huge pink carnations in a bold design. The frock is high-waisted, with a blue satin ribbon for a sash and a wide billowy skirt that touches the floor in front and falls into a tiny train in back.

Jeweled clasps at either side of her shining brunette coiffure give a sophisticated touch to this otherwise demure, Victoria costume.

Short Skirts Questioned

Orry-Kelly, who designs frocks for Warner Brothers' beauties, is decidedly at war with Paris so far as his opinion on short skirts is concerned.

On this question Paris says "yes," but Orry-Kelly says "no." "They may give a shorter effect," he admits, "but this will be because they will flare a little. Women won't suddenly revert to the short skirts of five or six years ago, as this would be too sudden. The history of style shows that changes are made gradually."

As part of this gradual change, Kelly admits that the very new evening frocks are liable to have skirts that reach the toes in front and fall into trains for several inches in back.

He even tells you that flounces, wrap-overs, and ruffles will undoubtedly be in vogue this Summer as a means of breaking the hemline and showing the feet in front.

As the season grows, evidently, he is prepared to become more and more daring in his style creations, so it may be that the short, gathered skirt may be on its way via the subtle route.

Dog Collar Dress

Joan Crawford can be depended upon to offer at least one startling new fashion in each picture. Her latest innovation was the huge brilliant clip, repeated several times on her frocks.

Now she introduces the "dog-collar" dress, which is a hostess gown, spilt down the back and featuring a chin-high collar cut perfectly square.

In the time of the French Revolution this square collar was in vogue, but with a decided purpose in view. It hid the double chins of those aristocrats who hadn't learned to keep fit with diet and exercise.

In 1935, when our screen beauties don't allow an excess pound on their figures, this collar is used solely as a trick of fashion. And we hope it won't become a part of our smart dress.

'Tis Spring and Tricky Suits Are Top o' World

HAPPY days are here again and 'tis Spring, 'tis Spring! And the trick little suit is the season's favorite garment.

There is plenty of variety in both styles and materials, but the navy blue suit is undoubtedly the fashionable thing, both here and abroad.

Tweeds are very good in two and three-piece suits, and greys and browns come next to blue in popularity. The suit shown at the extreme right is newer in styling than the hip-length jacket. Notice the backward swing of the box jacket and the bell sleeves. It is a Molyneux adaptation, and the blouse is navy with white dots, and ties in a smart bow in front.

The costume next to it is also navy with white waffle collar and cuffs, white belt and gloves.

It is delightfully simple with the huge collar of white pique. A Lanvin adaptation.

Maagy Rouff is responsible for the princess gown, left, which is done in lavender linen with a ribbed material forming the stand-up collar and revers.

One of the sheer black dinner dresses that are so well liked this year is worn underneath the gorgeous silver fox cape, shown on the girl seated on the railing. The cut of this cape is unusual and very effective without. The dress has a rhinestone buckle.

Swedish Workers Making Gifts for Princess Ingrid

STOCKHOLM.—Swedish brides, generally have a crown made from myrtle, but Princess Ingrid's jeweled crown headpiece will indicate her royal rank. Some of the sports clothes for her trousseau will be made in London, Paris will provide some of the royal lingerie, and peasants in Sweden and Denmark have selected the finest flax to be woven into linen and delicately embroidered.

The leading body of Swedish craft workers, all educated women, are making Princess Ingrid a striking wedding present of handwork.

Their combined gift will enable her to furnish an entire room of her own home with typical Swedish souvenirs. There will be hand-woven rugs in gay colors, white linen table runners with rich wheel and heart motifs in red and blue, carved wooden candlesticks in the old Norse "U" design, platters of hand-hammered pewter, and some exquisite Swedish glass. The Princess has long taken a particular interest in the renaissance of the Swedish peasant industries.

There's no need of losing touch with any of your friends next time you move. Naturally you'll be busy at the time and can't call on all your acquaintances. But the greeting card designers have taken that into consideration.

In a collection of cards at a store

Queen Victoria's Daughters Helping With Third Jubilee

LONDON.—Two royal sisters who helped their mother, Queen Victoria, entertain her guests at Buckingham Palace during the Jubilees of 1887 and 1897, are now preparing to take part in the third Royal Jubilee they have known.

They are Princess Louise, who is 87, and Princess Beatrice, who is nine years younger. The former, who lives at Kensington Palace, is facing a round of public duties that compares with those of the younger members of the Royal family. She is in great demand at children's functions, and, at the Queen's special wish, she hopes to be present at one of the Jubilee Courts.

If she does so, she will wear her emerald set, comprising tiara, necklace and other ornaments, which has appeared at many functions of the Victorian Court.

King's Ballroom

The King's ballroom, where two State balls are to be given during the Jubilee celebrations can be seen from the pavement. It is easily the largest private ballroom in London, and has one of the best floors.

There are certain little oddities in regard to entertainments at Buckingham Palace that sometimes puzzle or embarrass the uninitiated.

For instance, all forks are placed with the points downward on the dinner or luncheon table, though no one seems to know how this originated. The table napkins for State dinners are enormous—almond set, comprising tiara, necklace and other ornaments, which has ing once said, "like young sheets."

Housemaids Get Breaks In New Deal

By LILIAN CAMPBELL
Housemaids at last are going to get a break, according to Miss Dorothy Wells, employment secretary of the national staff of the Young Women's Christian Association.

The old hit and miss system of housekeeping is being attacked both by housewives and household workers, and the recent growth of informal school for the all-round training of household employees. Miss Wells believes is aiding the movement, as is the group co-operation which employers are giving toward better standards in wages, hours and working conditions.

Miss Wells is in close contact with 12,000 household workers throughout the United States who belong to the organization she represents. Also, in co-operation with Mrs. Allan K. Chalmers, chairman of the committee for the Y.W.C.A., she is also working with forty different groups of employees.

"Girls and women in domestic work are beginning to realize more and more that their individual welfare, the conditions under which they work and the wages they get, is inevitably tied up with the importance of their occupation," Miss Wells says.

"This occupational distinction will come largely through supervised training. Hazardous experience is not sufficient to teach girls the required skill in meeting average home problems adequately. There is always the factor of human relationships in household employment from which most of the problems arise, and with the thoughtful and intelligent consideration of both the employer and employee, there is some hope that certain standards will be assumed by both groups for their mutual welfare."

"No attempt is being made to standardize domestic work, since home life cannot be regulated as offices and factories, but certain adjustments in schedules and general conditions must be made in order to attract young women who are distinctly interested in household employment. They are just as much concerned about the long hours as they are about low wages, and they do feel quite rightly that some provision must be made for their own social and personal welfare beyond working hours."

The little suede brushes that are sold at notion counters for refreshing suede bags or shoes are very effective in removing certain kinds of spots from silk crepe dresses. Egg or any waxy substance which leaves a deposit on the surface of the material does not yield readily to water, cleaning fluids, scraping or the ordinary stiff brush. But a little vigorous brushing with the suede brush often does the trick.

The fine, stiff wire "bristles" seem to penetrate the fabric itself and remove the spot completely, even after it has dried. And there is no danger of the dreaded "ring" left sometimes by liquid cleaning preparations.

Knitted Slacks Included In Costume Worn by Star

By MOLLIE MERRICK
(Copyright, 1935, by the North American Newspaper Alliance, Inc.)

HOLLYWOOD, Cal.—Knitted sports costumes are a positive rage in Hollywood today. Knit shops have sprung up here, there and everywhere in the cinema village and most of our younger actresses are knitting busily between scenes in their current films.

Gertrude Michael, one of Paramount's brightest stars—for the future, sports a gay knit ensemble these days. It is in primrose yellow wool and consists of slacks, a sweater and a cardigan.

Crossed tennis rackets in navy blue ornament the sweater pocket and blue wool socks contrast smartly with the yellow linen sandals that match the costume.

Gertrude Michael says it is ideal for the beach, the tennis court, or even for lounging about the house. And we say that, seeing it on Gertrude, would make it about right for any occasion.

"Merry Widow" Costumes

And speaking of the latest in style, those who know tell us that Paris has been swept by a longing to look like Jean MacDonald in her "Merry Widow" costume.

Ruffles and more ruffles, especially in net, mark the effect that 1935, with its streamline ideas, tries to incorporate into the newer than new costume. Waistlines are a bit higher, due to the merry widow's charms, and coiffures have taken on that purposely uncoiffed look, usually bursting into a bunch of curls on top of the head. Bangs continue in favor for evening wear when they really add something to the gay '30's flavor.

Our local beauties are having more fun experimenting with subtle colors in their evening frocks. Gone are the days when a girl faced a room in conventional black or white.

You're nobody now unless your gown is of smoke-grey, orange-white, smoke-blue or some decidedly different color scheme. A mauve dress or an orchid-tinted chiffon means more to chic these nights than all the metal cloth in the world.

Such highlights as are deemed necessary are introduced into a frock with shoulder straps of a brilliant hued or a wide sash that announces its charms clear across a room.

Hindu Frock

Imagine the brunette beauty of Kay Francis enhanced by a Hindu frock of orchid chiffon, whose peplum wrapping continues over the shoulders and ends in a long scarf that may be draped over the head in true Hindu fashion, or may be allowed to float loose from one shoulder when indoors.

Dull gold metal is hammered into the chiffon to form a smart border on this material and is the only ornament Miss Francis wears with the frock, with the exception of a pair of heavy gold bracelets of Oriental design.

A perfect formal costume for the girl with Kay Francis' imitable coloring and willow-like grace.

Gertrude Michael, one of the younger stars of the cinema, wears a knitted sports costume such as the film colony is going for in a big way right now. This ensemble is in primrose yellow wool and consists of slacks, a sweater and a cardigan. Blue wool socks contrast with Miss Michael's yellow linen sandals.

Interesting Sauces Make Menu Change

A good sauce will make the plainest dishes interesting, says a correspondent in The Times, London. Sauces are not hard to make once the foundation rules have been learned.

A great many sauces, such as white sauce, parsley, egg, caper, tomato, anchovy, to mention just a few, are made with exactly the same foundation, so I will give the recipe for a good white sauce.

There are two kinds of sauce, flowing and coating sauce.

Usual quantities for coating sauce: One oz. flour to one-half pint liquid.

White sauce: Three-quarter oz. flour, three-quarter oz. butter, half-pint milk, pepper and salt.

Melt the butter. Add the flour and stir over the fire till flour and butter form a ball. Stir well till boiling, and continue to whisk till sauce has boiled for five minutes. Sprinkle in salt and pepper to season.

Note.—If a coating sauce, add the last of the milk very carefully to obtain the right thickness.

If the sauce is for a fish dish, use one gill of fish stock and one gill of milk. If for a meat dish, one gill meat stock and one gill of milk may be used.

Follow these directions, and your sauces can always be depended upon to give good results.

Parsley Sauce

Half-pint white sauce, one dessertspoonful very finely chopped parsley, half oz. butter. Add the parsley when the sauce is done, boil up once, to take away the raw flavor, beat the butter in tiny pats into the sauce below boiling point. Do this with a whisk.

Egg Sauce

Half-pint white sauce, one hard-boiled egg. Chop the white of egg and half the yolk. Add these to the sauce. Coat the fish and then decorate with remainder of the sieved yolk.

Dutch Sauce

Half-pint white sauce, one raw yolk of egg, few drops of tarragon vinegar. Cool the sauce slightly. Add the yolk, and stir over a moderate heat till the yolk thickens. Do not boil. Add lemon juice and vinegar to give sharpness to the flavor.

Horse-Radish Sauce

One and a half oz. horse-radish, quarter gill cream, quarter gill milk, one tablespoonful white vinegar, one teaspoonful castor sugar, mustard, salt, cayenne. Mix all the ingredients except the cream. Whisk the cream slightly, lightly stir in the other ingredients to the cream.

Note.—Whisk the cream and milk together. This does excellently, instead of using the full gill of cream.

Caper Sauce

One and a half oz. flour, one dessertspoonful capers, one and a half oz. butter, one teaspoonful caper vinegar, two gills meat stock, one gill milk, pepper and salt. Make the white sauce, add the chopped capers and vinegar, season well, and re-heat.

Piquante Sauce

This is a good sauce for many meat dishes.

Half oz. dripping, half oz. flour, half pint stock, one dessertspoon ketchup, blade of mace, one tablespoon vinegar, pepper, salt, one onion, a small piece of carrot, one bay leaf, four or five button mushrooms. Melt the dripping, fry the vegetables in it till firm, add the flour and brown carefully. Add the vinegar and reduce for four or five minutes. Add the stock by degrees and a pinch of salt, boil up, then skim well and add ketchup. Simmer steadily for thirty or forty minutes, stirring and skimming when necessary. Strain the sauce, and then re-heat.

Chinese Policeman

In Taian, China, every policeman is equipped with a pair of scissors, to be used in cutting off the long braid of pedestrians who still cling to the queues of their ancestors, as it is against the law of Shanghai to grow 'em.

HERE'S a black and white printed silk hostess gown that's gone Chinese in a big way. Bernard Newman is the designer and Maxine Jennings, former Paton mannequin, now in the movies, is the model.

Useful Recipes Savory

Italian Mince

Have half a pound of cold meat (cooked, with gristle removed), half a pound of macaroni, two ounces of grated cheese, one cup of breadcrumbs, one cup of brown sauce.

Mince the meat, then brown the breadcrumbs and grate the cheese. Boil the macaroni in salted water till soft. Then place in a greased dish, first the meat followed by macaroni—continue with alternate layers until the dish is full. Then sprinkle the top thickly with cheese and breadcrumbs. Bake in a fairly hot oven for fifteen minutes.

Kidney and Macaroni

Have four ounces of macaroni, breadcrumbs, ox kidney, three tomatoes, white stock.

Break up the macaroni into very small pieces, plunge it into boiling salted water and cook till tender; parboil an ox kidney, slice into pieces, and treat the tomatoes in the same way. Have a pie-dish ready greased, place in it a layer of the macaroni (when cooked and drained), then place a layer of kidney, followed by another of tomatoes. Next fill up the pie-dish with white stock, and complete the process with a good layer of breadcrumbs. Bake this in a slow oven.

Tongue Fried With Tomato Sauce

Four ounces of cooked tongue, one egg, tomato sauce, breadcrumbs, frying fat, pepper, lemon juice.

Cut up the tongue into thin slices, season each one well with pepper and lemon juice. Beat up an egg, add the breadcrumbs to it, then dip each slice of tongue in the mixture. Fry in deep fat, drain well, then serve on a hot dish. Serve with good tomato sauce.

Ride Pudding With Variations

One tablespoon of rice, one-half pint milk, one egg, three-quarters lb. raisins, one desert spoon of syrup or treacle.

Cook the rice in a pan with the milk till soft. Next stir in the treacle or syrup. Beat up an egg, then pour into the rice mixture. Stir well, after adding the raisins, then bake in a moderate oven for half an hour. A pinch of nutmeg on the top adds a delicious flavour to the pudding.

Tiara Styles Lighter

LONDON.—Tiaras are being worn again at Court, though they are being made or remodelled in lighter styles to suit the sleek coiffure of today. The tiara of 1935 is only about an inch deep. Instead of circling to the back, it is worn upright, halo fashion, from the top of the head to the ears. Often it is little more than a bandeau, and diamonds are the favorite stones. Some tiaras are detachable and can be separated into a brooch and two bracelets.

Designs are copied from Chinese and Persian carpets and tapestries; or one can have a "snake" tiara, a narrow bandeau which curls round the ears in an Eastern snake design.

The first Courts have proved that the 1935 debutante prefers colors to the traditional white for her Court gown. Pale pink and the great range of blues are finest favorites. Both colors go well with the silver touches introduced in so many gowns, especially taffeta and moire. Chiffon seems to have given way to lace.

One frock worn at the first Court was made of pale green lace, slightly stiffened. The very full skirt and short, demure corsage were placed over a green crepe underdress, while a green sash outlined the waist, into which was tucked a big bunch of lilies of the valley.

Gloves Grow On Sleeves

PARIS.—Black with touches of coral red has been much admired on Princess Aspasia of Greece. Another smart woman at the races, dressed in leaf green from head to foot, had the sleeves of her gown continued into gloves, so that she appeared to have been poured into the outfit.

Jewel fashions will be influenced by the exhibition of jewels lent for charity by private owners, including Mrs. Reggie Fowell, Princess de Fancigny Lucigne and the Marquis de Rochambeau. Some lovely early silver has been lent by the Rothschilds and Cardinal Verdier. One American visitor wore a halter collar of solid renaissance silver in a lace design, with heavy solid silver three-inch cuffs to match.

The big lingerie bow in fine white cambric, with exquisite stitchery, is chic and charming.

When you are selecting your new Spring chapeau, remember straw cannot be too shiny. The new "Anthracite" straw has the glister of hard coal and diamonds, and is very smart.
